TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

WILLIAM WYNDHAM,

SECRETARY AT WAR, &c. &c. &c.

SIR,

It was with great fatisfaction that I learned from a Friend that you coincided with me in the opinion, that the information contained in this Performance would make a ufeful impression on the minds of my Countrymen.

I have prefumed to inscribe it with your Name, that I may publicly express the pleasure which I felt, when I found that neither a separation for thirty years, nor the pressure of the most important business, had effaced your kind remembrance of a College Acquaintance, or abated that obliging and polite attention with which you favoured me in those early days of life.

The friendship of the accomplished and the worthy is the highest honour; and to him who is cut off, by want of health, from almost every other enjoyment, it is an inestimable blessing. Accept, therefore, I pray, of my grateful acknowledgments, and of my earnest wishes for your Health, Prosperity, and increasing Honour.

With fentiments of the greatest Esteem and Respect,

I am, SIR, Your most obedient, and most bumble Servant, JOHN ROBISON.

INTRODUCTION.

BEING at a friend's house in the country during fome part of the fummer 1795, I there faw a volume of a German periodical work, called Religions Begebenheiten, i. e. Religious Occurrences: in which there was an account of the various fchifms in the Fraternity of Free Masons, with frequent allusions to the origin and hiftory of that celebrated affociation. This account interested me a good deal, because, in my early life, I had taken fome part in the occupations (fhall I call them) of Free Mafonry; and, having chiefly frequented the Lodges on the Continent, I had learned many doctrines, and feen many ceremonials which have no place in the fimple fystem of Free Mafonry which obtains in this country. I had also remarked, that the whole was much more the object of reflection and thought than I could remember it to have been among my acquaintances at home. There, I had feen a Mafon Lodge confidered merely as a pretext for paffing an hour or two in a fort of decent conviviality, not altogether void of fome rational occupation. I had fometimes heard of differences of doctrines or of ceremonies, but in terms which marked them as mere frivolities. But, on the Continent, I found them matters of ferious concern and debate. Such Such too is the contagion of example, that I could not hinder myself from thinking one opinion better founded, or one Ritual more apposite and fignificant than another; and I even felt fomething like an anxiety for its being adopted, and a zeal for making it a general practice. I had been initiated in a very fplendid Lodge at Liege, of which the Prince Bishop, his Trefonciers, and the chief Noblesse of the State were members. I vifited the French Lodges at Valenciennes, at Bruffels, at Aix-la-Chapelle, at Berlin, and Koningfberg; and I picked up fome printed difcourses delivered by the Brother-orators of the Lodges. At St. Peteriburgh I connected myfelf with the English Lodge, and occafionally vifited the German and Ruffian Lodges held there. I found myfelf received with particular respect as a Scotch Mason, and as an Eleve of the Lodge de la Parfait Intelligence at Liege. I was importuned by perfons of the first rank to purfue my masonic career through many degrees unknown in this country. But all the fplendor and elegance that I faw could not conceal a frivolity in every part. It appeared a bafelefs fabric, and I could not think of engaging in an occupation which would confume much time, coft me a good deal of money, and might perhaps excite in me some of that fanaticism, or at least, enthusiasm, that I faw in others, and perceived to be void of any rational fupport. I therefore remained in the English Lodge, contented with the rank of Scotch Master, which was in a manner forced on me in a private Lodge of French Masons, but is not given in the English Lodge. My masonic rank admitted me to a very elegant entertainment in the female Loge de la Fidelité, where every ceremonial was composed in the highest degree of elegance, and every thing conducted with the most delicate refpect for our fair fifters, and the old fong of brotherly love was chanted in the most refined strain of fentiment.

fentiment. I do not suppose that the Parisian Free Mafonry of forty-five degrees could give me more entertainment. I had profited fo much by it, that I had the honour of being appointed the Brother-orator. In this office I gave fuch fatisfaction, that a worthy Bro-ther fent me at midnight a box, which he committed to my care, as a perfon far advanced in mafonic fcience, zealoufly attached to the order, and therefore a fit depository of important writings. I learned next day that this gentleman had found it convenient to leave the empire in a hurry, but taking with him the funds of an establishment of which her Imperial Majesty had made him the manager. I was defired to keep thefe writings till he should see me again. I obeyed. About ten years afterward I faw the gentleman on the ftreet in Edinburgh, conversing with a foreigner. As I paffed by him, I faluted him foftly in the Ruffian language ; but without ftopping, or looking him directly in the face. He coloured, but made no return. I endeavoured, in vain, to meet with him, withing to make a proper return for much civility and kindnefs which I had received from him in his own country.

I now confidered the box as acceffible to myfelf, and opened it. I found it to contain all the degrees of the Parfait Maçon Ecoffois, with the Rituals, Catechifms, and Inftructions, and alfo four other degrees of Free Mafonry, as cultivated in the Parifian Lodges. I have kept them with all care, and mean to give them to fome refpectable Lodge. But as I am bound by no engagement of any kind, I hold myfelf at liberty to make fuch ufe of them as may be ferviceable to the public, without enabling any uninitiated perfon to enter the Lodges of thefe degrees.

This acquifition might have roufed my former relifh for mafonry, had it been merely dormant; but, after fo long feparation from the Lodge de la Fidelité, the mafonic nic fpirit had evaporated. Some curiofity however remained, and fome with to trace this plaftic myftery to the pit from which the clay had been dug, which has been moulded into fo many different fhapes, "fome to "honour, and fome to difhonour." But my opportunities were now gone. I have given away (when in Ruffia) my volumes of difcourfes, and fome far-fetched and gratuitous hiftories, and nothing remained but the pitiful work of Anderfon, and the *Maçonnerie Adonbi*ramique devoilée, which are in every one's hands.

My curiofity was ftrongly roufed by the accounts given in the Religions Begebenheiten. There I faw quotations without number; fystems and schifms of which I had never heard; but what particularly ftruck me was a zeal and a fanaticifm about what I thought trifles, which aftonished me. Men of rank and fortune, and engaged in ferious and honourable public employments, not only frequenting the Lodges of the cities where they refided, but journeying from one end of Germany or France to the other, to visit new Lodges, or to learn new secrets or new doctrines. I faw conventions held at Wifimar, at Wifbad, at Kohlo, at Brunfwick, and at Willemfbad, confifting of fome hundreds of perfons of respectable stations. I faw adventurers coming to a city, profefling fome new fecret, and in a few days forming new Lodges, and instructing in a troublefome and expensive manner hundreds of brethren.

German Masonry appeared a very ferious concern, and to be implicated with other subjects with which I had never subjected it to have any connection. I faw it much connected with many occurrences and schifms in the Christian church; I faw that the Jesuits had several times interfered in it; and that most of the exceptionable innovations and differitons had arisen about the time that the order of Loyola was suppressed; fo that it should seem, that these intriguing brethren had attempted attempted to maintain their influence by the help of Free Mafonry. I faw it much difturbed by the myftical whims of J. Behmen and Swedenborg-by the fanatical and knavish doctrines of the modern Rosycrucians-by Magicians-Magnetifers-Exorcifts, &c. And I obferved that these different sects reprobated each other, as not only maintaining erroneous opinions, but even inculcating opinions which were contrary to the eftablished religions of Germany, and contrary to the principles of the civil establishments. At the fame time they charged each other with miftakes and corruptions, both in doctrine and in practice; and particularly with falsification of the first principles of Free Masonry, and with ignorance of its origin and its hiftory; and they fupported these charges by authorities from many different books which were unknown to me.

My curiofity was now greatly excited. I got from a much respected friend many of the preceding volumes of the Religions Begebenheiten, in hopes of much information from the patient industry of German erudition. This opened a new and very interesting fcene; I was frequently fent back to England, from whence all agreed that Free Masonry had been imported into Germany. I was frequently led into France and into Italy. There, and more remarkably in France, I found that the Lodges had become the haunts of many projectors and fanatics, both in fcience, in religion, and in politics, who had availed themfelves of the fecrecy and the freedom of fpeech maintained in these meetings, to broach their particular whims or fuspicious doctrines, which, if published to the world in the usual manner, would have exposed the authors to ridicule or to cenfure. These projectors had contrived to tag their peculiar noflrums to the mummery of Masonry, and were even allowed to twift the masonic emblems and ceremonies to to their purpose; so that in their hands Free Masonry became a thing totally unlike, and almost in direct opposition to the system (if it may get such a name) imported from England; and some Lodges had become schools of irreligion and licentious field.

No nation in modern times has fo particularly turned its attention to the cultivation of every thing that is refined or ornamental as France, and it has long been the refort of all who hunt after entertainment in its most refined form; the French have come to confider themselves as the instructors of the world in every thing that ornaments life, and feeling themfelves received as such, they have formed their manners accordingly-full of the most condescending complaifance to all who acknowledge their fuperiority. Delighted, in a high degree, with this office, they have become zealous missionaries of refinement in every department of human purfuit, and have reduced their apostolic employment to a fystem, which they profecute with ardour and delight. This is not groundlefs declamation, but fober historical truth. It was the profeffed aim (and it was a magnificent and wife aim) of the great Colbert, to make the court of Louis XIV. the fountain of human refinement, and Paris the Athens of Europe. We need only look, in the prefent day, at the plunder of Italy by the French army, to be convinced that their low-born generals and statefmen have in this refpect the fame notions with the Colberts and the Richlieus.

I know no fubject in which this aim at univerfal influence on the opinions of men, by holding themfelves forth as the models of excellence and elegance, is more clearly feen than in the care that they have been pleafed to take of Free Mafonry. It feems indeed peculiarly fuited to the talents and tafte of that vain and ardent people. Bafelefs and frivolous, it admits of every form form that Gallic refinement can invent, to recommend it to the young, the gay, the luxurious; that clafs of fociety which alone deferves their care, becaufe, in one way or another, it leads all other claffes of fociety.

It has accordingly happened, that the homely Free Mafonry imported from England has been totally changed in every country of Europe either by the impofing afcendency of French brethren, who are to be found every where, ready to inftruct the world; or by the importation of the doctrines, and ceremonies, and ornaments of the Parifian Lodges. Even England, the birth-place of Mafonry, has experienced the French innovations; and all the repeated injunctions, admonitions, and reproofs of the old Lodges, cannot prevent thofe in different parts of the kingdom from admitting the French novelties, full of tinfel and glitter, and high-founding titles.

Were this all, the harm would not be great. But long before good opportunities had occurred for fpreading the refinements on the fimple Free Mafonry of England, the Lodges in France had become places of very ferious difcuffion, where opinions in morals, in religion, and in politics, had been promulgated and maintained with a freedom and a keennefs, of which we in this favoured land have no adequate notion, becaufe we are unacquainted with the reftraints which, in other countries, are laid on ordinary converfation. In confequence of this, the French innovations in Free Mafonry were quickly followed in all parts of Europe, by the admiffion of fimilar difcuffions, although in direct oppofition to a ftanding rule, and a declaration made to every newly received Brother, " that nothing touching the religion or government " fhall ever be fpoken of in the Lodge." But the Lodges in other countries followed the example of France, and have frequently become the rendezvo:s of innovators in religion and politics, and other difturbers of the public peace. In fhort, I have found that the covert of a Mason Lodge had been employed in every country for venting and propagating fentiments in religion and politics, that could not have circulated in public without exposing the author to great danger. I found, that this impunity had gradually encouraged men of licentious principles to become more bold, and to teach doctrines subversive of all our notions of morality-of all our confidence in the moral government of the universe-of all our hopes of improvement in a future state of existence-and of . all fatisfaction and contentment with our present life, fo long as we live in a ftate of civil fubordination. I have been able to trace thefe attempts, made, through a course of fifty years, under the specious pretext of enlightening the world by the torch of philolophy, and of difpelling the clouds of civil and religious fuperftition which keep the nations of Europe in darkness and flavery. I have obferved thefe doctrines gradually diffusing and mixing with all the different fystems of Free Mafonry; till, at last, AN Association HAS BEEN FORMED for the express purpose of ROOTING OUT ALL THE RELIGIOUS ESTABLISHMENTS, AND OVER-TURNING ALL THE EXISTING GOVERNMENTS OF EUROPE. I have feen this Affociation exerting itfelf zealoufly and fyftematically, till it has become almost irrefiftible: And I have feen that the most active leaders in the French Revolution were members of this Affociation, and conducted their first movements according to its principles, and by means of its instructions and affistance, formally requested and obtained: And, lastly, I have feen that this Affociation still exifts, ftill works in fecret, and that not only feveral appearances among ourfelves show that its emissaries are endeavouring to propagate their detestable doctrines trines among us, but that the Affociation has Lodges in Britain corresponding with the mother Lodge at Munich ever fince 1784.

If all this were a matter of mere curiofity, and fufceptible of no good use, it would have been better to have kept it to myself, than to disturb my neighbours with the knowledge of a ftate of things which they cannot amend. But if it shall appear that the minds of my countrymen are milled in the very fame manner as were those of our continental neighbours-if I can fhow that the reafonings which make a very ftrong impreffion on fome perfons in this country are the fame which actually produced the dangerous affociation in Germany; and that they had this unhappy influence folely because they were thought to be fincere, and the expressions of the sentiments of the speakers-if I can show that this was all a cheat, and that the Leaders of this Affociation difbelieved every word that they uttered, and every doctrine that they taught; and that their real intention was to abolish all religion, overturn. every government, and make the world a general plunder and a wreck-if I can fhow, that the principles which the Founder and Leaders of this Affociation held forth as the perfection of human virtue, and the most powerful and efficacious for forming the minds of men, and making them good and happy, had no influence on the Founder and Leaders themfelves, and that they were, almost without exception, the most infignificant, worthlefs, and profligate of men; I cannot but think, that fuch information will make my countrymen hefitate a little, and receive with caution, and even diftruft, addreffes and inftructions which flatter our felf-conceit, and which, by buoying us up with the gay profpect of what feems attainable by a change, may make us difcontented with our prefent condition, and forget that there never was a government on earth where where the people of a great and luxurious nation enjoyed fo much freedom and fecurity in the poffeffion of every thing that is dear and valuable.

When we fee that thefe boafted principles had not that effect on the Leaders which they affert to be their native, certain, and inevitable confequences, we shall distrust the fine descriptions of the happiness that should result from such a change. And when we see that the methods which were practifed by this Affociation for the express purpose of breaking all the bands of fociety, were employed folely in order that the Leaders might rule the world with uncontroulable power, while all the reft, even of the affociated, fhould be degraded in their own estimation, corrupted in their principles, and employed as mere tools of the ambition of their unknown superiors; furely a free-born Briton will not hefitate to reject at once, and without any farther examination, a plan fo big with mifchief, fo difgraceful to its underling adherents, and fo uncertain in its iffue.

These hopes have induced me to lay before the public a short abstract of the information which I think I have received. It will be short, but I hope sufficient for establishing the fact, that this detestable Affociation exists, and its emission are busy among ourselves.

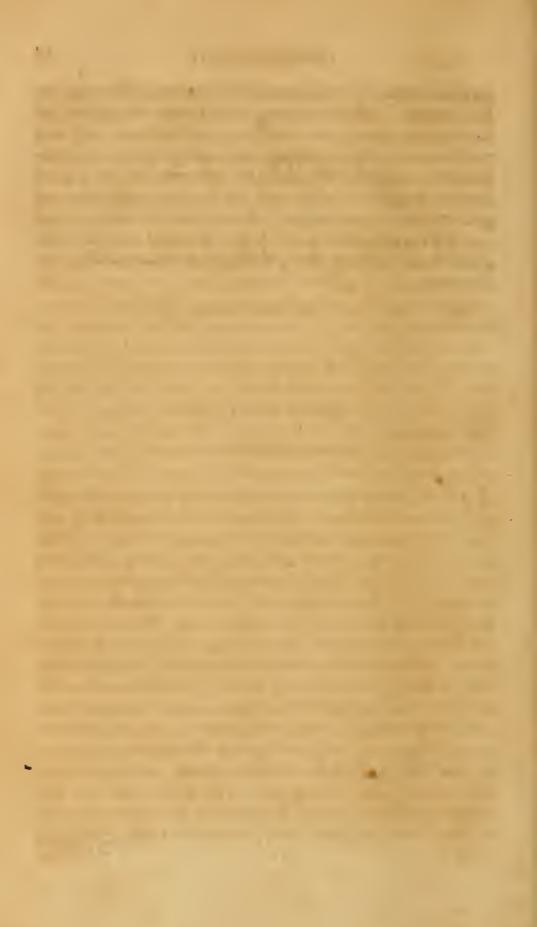

I was not contented with the quotations which I found in the Religions Begebenheiten, but procured from abroad fome of the chief writings from which they are taken. This both gave me confidence in the quotations from books which I could not procure, and furnished me with more materials. Much, however, remains untold, richly deferving the attention of all those who feel themselves disposed to listen to the tales of a possible happiness that may be enjoyed in a fociety where all the magistrates are wise and just, and all the people are honess that.

I hope that I am honeft and candid. I have been at all pains to give the true fense of the authors. My knowledge of the German language is but scanty, but I have had the affiftance of friends whenever I was in doubt. In compreffing into one paragraph what I have collected from many, I have, as much as I was able, fluck to the words of the author, and have been anxious to give his precife meaning. I doubt not but that I have fometimes failed, and will receive correction with deference. I entreat the reader not to expect a piece of good literary composition. I am very fenfible that it is far from it-it is written during bad health, when I am not at eafe-and I with to conceal my name-but my motive is, without the fmalleft mixture of another, to do fome good in the only way I am able, and I think that what I fay will come with better grace, and be received with more confidence, than any anonymous publication. Of thefe I am now most heartily sick. I throw myself on my country with a free heart, and I bow with deference to its decifion.

The affociation of which I have been fpeaking is the Order of Illuminati, founded, in 1775, by Dr. Adam Weishaupt, professor of Canon law in the university of Ingolstadt, and abolished in 1786 by the Elector of Bavaria, but revived immediately after, under another name, and in a different form, all over Germany. It was again detected, and feemingly broken up; but it had by this time taken fo deep root that it still subfists without being detected, and has fpread into all the countries of Europe. It took its first rife among the Free Masons, but is totally different from Free Masonry. It was not, however, the mere protection gained by the fecrecy of the Lodges that gave occasion to it, but it arose naturally from the corruptions that had gradually crept into that. fraternity, the violence of the party spirit which pervaded it, it, and from the total uncertainty and darkness that hangs over the whole of that mysterious Association. It is neceffary, therefore, to give fome account of the innovations that have been introduced into Free Mafonry from the time that it made its appearance on the continent of Europe as a mystical fociety, possessing fecrets different from those of the mechanical employment whofe name it affumed, and thus affording entertainment and occupation to perfons of all ranks and professions. It is by no means intended to give a hiftory of Free Masonry. This would lead to a very long discussion. The patient industry of German erudition has been very ferioufly employed on this fubject, and many performances have been published, of which fome account is given in the different volumes of the Religions Begebenheiten, particularly in those for 1779, 1785, and 1786. It is evident, from the nature of the thing, that they cannot be very instructive to the public; becaufe the obligation of fecrecy refpecting the important matters which are the very subjects of debate, prevents the author from giving that full information that is required from an historian ; and the writers have not, in general, been perfons qualified for the tafk. Scanty erudition, credulity, and enthusiafm, appear in almost all their writings; and they have neither attempted to remove the heap of rubbish with which Anderson has difgraced his Constitutions of Free Masonry, (the basis of masonic history,) nor to avail themsfelves of informations which hiftory really affords to a fober enquirer. Their Royal art must never forfooth appear in a state of infancy or childhood, like all other human acquirements; and therefore, when they cannot give proofs of its existence in a state of manhood, posseffed of all its mysterious treasures, they suppose what they do not fee, and fay that they are concealed by the oath of fecrecy. Of such instruction I can make no no ufe, even if I were difpofed to write a hiftory of the Fraternity. I shall content myself with an account of fuch particulars as are admitted by all the masonic parties, and which illustrate or confirm my general proposition, making such use of the accounts of the higher degrees in my possession as I can without admitting the profane into their Lodges. Being under no tie of fecrecy with regard to these, I am with-held by differentian alone from putting the public in possession of all their mysteries.

A CONSPIRACY, &c.

CHAP. I.

Schifms in Free Masonry.

HERE is undoubtedly a dignity in the art of building, or in architecture, which no other art poffeffes, and this, whether we confider it in its rudest state, occupied in raifing a hut, or as practifed in a cultivated nation, in the erection of a magnificent and ornamented temple. As the arts in general improve in any nation, this must always maintain its pre-eminence; for it employs them all, and no man can be eminent as an architect who does not poffes a confiderable knowledge of almost every science and art already cultivated in his nation. His great works are undertakings of the most ferious concern, connect him with the public, or with the rulers of the ftate; and attach to him the practitioners of other arts, who are occupied in executing his orders: His works are the objects of public attention, and are not the transient spectacles of the day, but hand down to posterity his invention, vention, his knowledge, and his tafte. No wonder then that he thinks highly of his profession, and that the public should acquiesce in his pretensions, even when in some degree extravagant.

It is not at all furprifing, therefore, that the incorporated architects in all cultivated nations should arrogate to themselves a pre-eminence over the fimilar affociations of other tradefinen. We find traces of this in the remotest antiquity. The Dionyfiacs of Afia Minor were undoubtedly an affociation of architects and engineers, who had the exclusive privilege of building temples, stadia, and theatres, under the mysterious tutelage of Bacchus, and diftinguished from the uninitiated or profane inhabitants by the science which they poffessed, and by many private figns and tokens, by which they recognifed each other. This affociation came into Ionia from Syria, into which country it had come from Persia, along with that style of architecture We are also certain that there that we call Grecian. was a fimilar trading affociation, during the dark ages, in Chriftian Europe, which monopolized the building of great churches and caftles, working under the patronage and protection of the Sovereigns and Princes of Europe, and possessing many privileges. Circumstances, which it would be tedious to enumerate and discuss, continued this affociation later in Britain than on the Continent.

But it is quite uncertain when and why perfons who were not builders by profeffion firft fought admiffion into this Fraternity. The firft diftinct and unequivocal inftance that we have of this is the admiffion of Mr. Afhmole, the famous antiquary, in 1648, into a Lodge at Warrington, along with his father-in law Colonel Mainwaring. It is not improbable that the covert of fecrecy in those affemblies had made them courted by the Royalifts, as occasions of meeting. Nay, the Ritual

tual of the Master's degree seems to have been formed, or perhaps twifted from its original inftitution, fo as to give an opportunity of founding the political princi-ples of the candidate, and of the whole Brethren prefent. For it bears fo eafy an adaption to the death of the King, to the overturning of the venerable confti-tution of the English government of three orders by a mean democracy, and its re-establishment by the efforts of the loyalists, that this would start into every perfon's mind during the ceremonial, and could hardly fail to show, by the countenances and behaviour of the Brethren, how they were affected. I recommend this hint to the confideration of the Brethren. I have met with many particular facts, which convince me that this use had been made of the meetings of Mafons, and that at this time the Jefuits interfered confiderably, infinuating themfelves into the Lodges, and contributing to encrease that religious mysticism that is to be observed in all the ceremonies of the order. This fociety is well known to have put on every fhape, and to have made use of every mean that could pro-mote the power and influence of the order. And we know that at this time they were by no means without hopes of re-establishing the dominion of the Church of Rome in England. Their fervices were not fcrupled at by the diftreffed royalists, even such as were Protestants, while they were highly prized by the Sovereign. We also know that Charles II. was made a Mason, and frequented the Lodges. It is not unlikely, that besides the amusement of a vacant hour, which was always agreeable to him, he had pleafure in the meeting with his loyal friends, and in the occupations of the Lodge, which recalled to his mind their attachment and fervices. His brother and fucceffor James II. was of a more ferious and manly caft of mind, and had little pleafure in the frivolous ceremonies monies of Masonry. He did not frequent the Lodges. But, by this time, they were the refort of many perfons who were not of the profession, or members of the trading corporation. This circumstance, in all probability, produced the denominations of FREE and Ac-CEPTED. A perfon who has the privilege of working at any incorporated trade, is faid to be a freeman of that trade. Others were accepted as Brethren, and admitted to a kind of honorary freedom, as is the case in many other trades and incorporations, without having (as far as we can learn for certain) a legal title to earn a livelihood by the exercise of it.

The Lodges being in this manner frequented by perfons of various professions, and in various ranks of civil fociety, it cannot be fuppofed that the employment in those meetings related entirely to the offenfible profession of Masonry. We have no authentic information by which the public can form any opinion about it. It was not till fome years after this period that the Lodges made open profession of the cultivation of general benevolence, and that the grand aim of the Fraternity was to enforce the exercise of all the focial virtues. It is not unlikely that this was an after-thought. The political purposes of the affociation being once obtained, the conversation and occupations of the members must take some particular turn, in order to be generally acceptable. The eftablishment of a fund for the relief of unfortunate Brethren did not take place till the very end of last century ; and we may prefume that it was brought about by the warm recommendations of some benevolent members, who would naturally enforce it by addresses to their assembled Brethren. This is the probable origin of those philanthropic discourses which were delivered in the Lodges by one of the Brethren as an official tafk. Brotherly love was the general topic, and this, with great propriety, priety, when we confider the object aimed at in those addreffes. Nor was this object altogether a novelty. For while the manners of fociety were yet but rude, Brother Masons, who were frequently led by their employment far from home and from their friends, ftood in need of fuch helps, and might be greatly benefited by fuch an inftitution, which gave them introduction and citizenship wherever they went, and a right to share in the charitable contributions of Brethren who were strangers to them. Other incorporated trades had fimilar provisions for their poor. But their poor were townsmen and neighbours, well known to them. There was more perfuasion necessary in this Fraternity, where the objects of our immediate beneficence were not of our acquaintance. But when the Lodges confifted of many who were not Mafons, and who had no particular claim to good offices from a ftranger, and their number might be great, it is evident that ftronger perfuafions were now neceffary, and that every topic of philanthropy must now be employed. When the funds became confiderable, the effects naturally took the public eye, and recommended the Society to notice and refpect. And now the Brethren were induced to dwell on the fame topic, to join in the commendations bestowed on the Society, and to fay that univerfal beneficence was the great aim of the Order. And this is all that could be faid in public, without infringing the obligation to fecrecy. The inquifitive are always prying and teazing, and this is the only point on which a Brother is at liberty to fpeak. He will therefore do it with affectionate zeal, till perhaps he has heated his own fancy a little, and overlooks the inconfistency of this universal beneficence and philanthropy with the exclusive and monopolizing fpirit of an Affociation, which not only confines its benevolence to its own Members, (like any other charitable ritable affociation,) but hoards up in its bofom ineftimable fecrets, whofe natural tendency, they fay, is to form the heart to this generous and kind conduct, and infpire us with love to all mankind. The profane world cannot fee the beneficence of concealing from public view a principle or a motive which fo powerfully induces a Mafon to be good and kind. The Brother fays that publicity would rob it of its force, and we must take him at his word; and our curiofity is fo much the more excited to learn what are the fecrets which have fo fingular a quality.

Thus did the Fraternity conduct themfelves, and thus were they confidered by the public, when it was carried over from England to the continent; and here it is to be particularly remarked that all our Brethren abroad profefs to have received the Mystery of Free Masonry from Britain. This is furely a puzzle in the history; and we must leave it to others to reconcile this with the repeated affertions in Anderson's book of Constitutions, "That the Fraternity existed all over the World," and the numberless examples which he adduces of its exertions in other countries; nay, with his repeated affertions, " that it frequently was near perishing in " Britain, and that our Princes were obliged to fend " to France and other countries, for leading men, to " restore it to its former energy among us." We shall find by and by that it is not a point of mere historical curiofity, but that much hinges on it.

In the mean time, let us just remember, that the plain tale of Brotherly love had been polished up to protestations of universal benevolence, and had taken place of loyalty and attachment to the unfortunate Family of Stuart, which was now totally forgotten in the English Lodges. The Revolution had taken place, and King James, with many of his most zealous adherents, had taken refuge in France.

But

CHAP. I.

But they took Free Mafonry with them to the continent, where it was immediately received by the French, and was cultivated with great zeal in a manner fuited to the tafte and habits of that highly polifhed people. The Lodges in France naturally became the rendezvous of the adherents to the exiled King, and the means of carrying on a correspondence with their friends in England. At this time alfo the Jefuits took a more active hand in Free Masonry than ever. They infinuated themfelves into the English Lodges, where they were carefied by the Catholics, who panted after the re-establishment of their faith, and tolerated by the Protestant royalists, who thought no concession too great a compensation for their services. At this time changes were made in fome of the Mafonic fymbols, particularly in the tracing of the Lodge, which bear evident marks of Jesuitical interference.

It was in the Lodge held at St. Germain's that the degree of Chevalier Magon Ecofficis was added to the three SYMBOLICAL degrees of English Masonry. The conftitution, as imported, appeared too coarfe for the refined tafte of our neighbours, and they must make Mafonry more like the occupation of a gentleman. Therefore, the English degrees of Apprentice, Fellowcraft, and Mafter, were called fymbolical, and the whole contrivance was confidered either as typical of fomething more elegant, or as a preparation for it. The degrees afterwards superadded to this leave us in doubt which of these views the French entertained of our Masonry. But at all events, this rank of Scotch Knight was called the first degree of the Maçon Perfait. There is a device belonging to this Lodge which deferves notice. A lion, wounded by an arrow, and elcaped from the ftake to which he had been bound, with the broken rope still about his neck, is represented lying at the mouth of a cave, and occupied with mathema-D ricel

tical inftruments which are lying near him. A broken crown lies at the foot of the stake. There can be little doubt but that this emblem alludes to the dethronement, the captivity, the escape, and the afylum of James II. and his hopes of re-eftablishment by the help of the loyal Brethren. This emblem is worn as the gorget of the Scotch Knight. It is not very certain, however, when this degree was added, whether im-mediately after king James's Abdication, or about the time of the attempt to fet his fon on the British Throne. But it is certain, that in 1716, this and still higher degrees of Masonry were much in vogue in the Court of France. The refining genius of the French, and their love of fhow, made the humble denominations of the English Brethren difgusting; and their passion for military rank, the only character that connected them with the court of an abfolute monarch, made them adapt Free Mafonry to the fame scale of public estimation, and invent ranks of Maçons Chevaliers, ornamented with titles, and ribands, and ftars. Thefe were highly relifhed by that vain people; and the price of reception, which was very high, became a rich fund, that was generally applied to relieve the wants of the banifhed British and Irish adherents of the unfortunate Family who had taken refuge among them. Three new degrees, of Novice, Eleve, and Chevalier, were foon added, and the Parfait Mccon had now feven receptions to go through, for each of which a handfome contribution was made. Afterwards, when the first beneficent purpole of this contribution cealed to exist, the finery that now glittered in all the Lodges made a still more craving demand for reception-money, and ingenuity was fet to work to invent new baits for the Parfait Magon. More degrees of chivalry were added, interspersed with degrees of Philesophe, Pellerin, Clairpoyant, &c. &c. till fome Parifien Lodges had fortyfive five ranks of Masonry, having fifteen orders of chivalry. For a Knighthood, with a Riband and a Star, was a benne bouche, given at every third step. For a long while thefe degrees of chivalry proceeded on fome faint analogies with feveral orders of chivalry which had been erected in Europe. All of thefe had foine reference to some mystical doctrines of the Christian church, and were, in fact, contrivances of the Church of Rome for fecuring and extending her influence on the laymen of rank and fortune, whom fhe retained in her fervice by these play-things. The Knights Templars of Jerufalem, and the Knights of the Defert, whofe office it was to protect pilgrims, and to defend the holy city, afforded very apt models for Masonic mimicry, becaufe the Temple of Solomon, and the Holy Sepulchre, always shared the fame fate. Many contefted doctrines of the theologians had alfo their Chevaliers to defend them.

In all this progreffive mummery we fee much of the hand of the Jefuits, and it would feem that it was encouraged by the church. But a thing happened which might eafily have been foreseen. The Lodges had become familiar with this kind of invention; the profeffed object of many real Orders of Knighthood was often very whimfical, or very refined and far-fetched, and it required all the fineffe of the clergy to give to it fome flight connection with religion or morality. The Masons, protected by their secrecy, ventured to go farther. The declamations in the lodges by the Brother orator, must naturally refemble the compositions of the ancient fophifts, and confift of wire-drawn differtations on the focial duties, where every thing is amplified and ftrained to hyperbole, in their far-fetched and fanciful explanations of the fymbols of Mafonry. Thus accustomed to allegory, to fiction, to finesse, and to a fort of innocent hypocrify by which they cajoled themfelves into into a notion that this child's-play had at bottom a ferious and important meaning, the zealous champions of Free Mafonry found no inclination to check this inventive fpirit or circumferibe its flights. Under the protection of Mafonic fecrecy, they planned fchemes of a different kind, and inftead of more Orders of Chivalry directed against the enemies of their faith, they formed affociations in oppofition to the ridiculous and opprefive ceremonies and fuperflitions of the church. There can be no doubt, that in those hidden affemblies, a free communication of sentiment was highly relified and much indulged. It was foon fufpected that fuch use was made of the covert of a Mason Lodge; and the church dreaded the confequences, and endeavoured to suppress the Lodges. But in vain. And when it was found, that even auricular confession, and the fpiritual threatenings of the church, could not make the Brethren break their oath of fecrecy; a full confidence in their fecurity made thefe free-thinking Brethren bring forward, with all the eagerness of a missionary, such sentiments as they were afraid to hazard in ordinary fociety. This was long fufpected; but the rigours of the church only ferved to knit the Brethren more firmly together, and provoked them to a more eager exercife of their bold criticisms. The Lodges became schools of scepticism and infidelity, and the spirit of conversion or profelytism grew every day stronger. Cardinal Dubois had before this time laboured with all his might to corrupt the minds of the courtiers, by patronifing, directly and indirectly, all sceptics who were otherwise men of talents. He gave the young courtiers to understand, that if he thould obtain the reins of government, they should be entirely freed from the bigotry of Louis XIV. and the oppression of the church, and should have the free indulgence of their inclinations. His own plans were difapdifappointed by his death; but the Regent Orleans was equally indulgent, and in a few years there was hardly a man in France who pretended know-ledge and reflection, who did not laugh at all religion. Amidst the almost infinite number of publications from the French preffes, there is hardly a dozen to be found where the author attempts to vindicate religion from the charges of univerfal fuperftition and falschood. And it must be acknowledged that little else was to be seen in the established religion of the kingdom. The people found nothing in Christianity but a never-ceasing round of infignificant and troublefome ceremonies, which confumed their time, and furnished a fund for supporting a fet of lordly and oppreflive dignitaries, who declared in the plainest manner their own difbelief of their religion, by their total difregard of common decency, by their continual refidence at court, and by abfolute neglect, and even the most haughty and oppressive treatment of the only part of their order that took any concern about the religious fentiments of the nation, namely the Curés or parishpriefts. The monks appeared only as lazy drones; but the parish-priests instructed the people, visited the fick, reconciled the offender and the offended, and were the great mediators between the landlords and their vaffals, an office which endeared them more to the people than all the other circumftances of their profession. And it is remarkable, that in all the licentious writings and bitter fatirical tales of the philosophic freethinkers, fuch as Voltaire, who never fails to have a taunting hit at the clergy, the Curéisgenerally an amiable perfonage, a charitable man, a friend to the poor andunfortunate, a peace-maker, and a man of piety and worth. Yet these men were kept in a state of the most flavish and cruel fubjection by the higher orders of the clergy, and all hopes of advancement cut off. Rarely, hardly hardly ever, does it happen, that a Curé becomes a Bishop. The Abbés step into every line of prefer-ment. When such procedure is observed by a whole nation, what opinion can be formed but that the whole is a vile cheat? This however was the cafe in France, and therefore infidelity was almost universal. Nor was this overstrained freedom or licentiousness confined to religious opinions. It was perhaps more natu-rally directed to the reftraints arifing from civil fubordination. The familiar name of Brother could not but tickle the fancy of those of inferior rank, when they found themselves fide by fide with perfons whom they cannot approach out of doors but with cautious respect; and while these men of rank have their pride lulled a little, and perhaps their hearts a little fostened by the hackneyed cant of fentimental declamation on the topic of Brotherly love and Utopian felicity, the others begin to fancy the happy days arrived, and the light of philanthropy beaming from the east and illu-minating the Lodge. The Garret Pamphleteer enjoys his fancied authority as Senior Warden, and conducts with affectionate folemnity the young nobleman, who pants for the honour of Mastership, and he praises the trufty Brother who has guarded him in his perilous journies round the room. What topic of declamation can be more agreeable than the equality of the worthy Brethren? and how naturally will the Brother Orator in fupport of this favourite topic, flide into all the common-place pictures of human fociety, freed from all the anxieties attending civil diftinction, and passing their days in happy fimplicity and equality. From this state of the fancy, it is hardly a step to descant on the propriety, the expediency, and at laft, the juffice of fuch an arrangement of civil fociety; and in doing this, one cannot avoid taking notice of the great ob-ftructions to human felicity which we fee in every quarter; quarter, proceeding from the abuses of those diftinctions of rank and fortune which have arifen in the world : and as the mifchiefs and horrors of fuperftition are topics of continual declamation to those who wish to throw off the restraints of religion; so the oppreffion of the rulers of this world, and the fufferings of talents and worth in inferior stations, will be no lefs greedily liftened to by all whofe notions of morality are not very pure, and who would be glad to have the enjoyments of the wealthy without the trouble of labouring for them. Free Masonry may be affirmed to have a natural tendency to foster such levelling wishes; and we cannot doubt but that great liberties are taken with those subjects in the Lodges, especially in countries where the diffinctions of rank and fortune are ftrongly expressed and noticed.

But it is not a matter of mere probability that the Mason Lodges were the seminaries of these libertine instructions. We have distinct proof of it, even in fome of the French degrees. In the degree called the Chevalier de Scleil, the whole instruction is aimed against the eftablished religion of the kingdom. The professed object is the emancipation from error and the difcovery of truth. The infeription in the east is Sageffe, that in the north is Liberté, that in the fouth is Fermeté, and in the west it is Caution; terms which are very fignificant. The Tres Venerable is Adam; the Senior Warden is Truth, and all the Brethren are Children of Truth. The process of reception is very well contrived: the whole ritual is decent and circumfpect, and nothing occurs which can alarm the most timid. Brother Truth is asked, What is the hour? He informs Father Adam, that among men it is the hour of darknefs, but that it is mid-day in the Lodge. The candidate is afked, Why he has knocked at the door, and what is become of his eight companions (he is one of the the Elus)? He fays, that the world is in darknefs, and his companions and he have loft each other; that Hesperus, the star of Europe, is obscured by clouds of incense, offered up by superstition to despots, who have made themfelves gods, and have retired into the inmost recesses of their palaces, that they may not be recognifed to be men, while their priefts are deceiving the people, and caufing them to worfhip these divinities. This and many fimilar fentiments are evident allufions to the pernicious doctrine of the book called Origine du Despotisme Oriental, where the religion of all countries is confidered as a mere engine of state; where it is declared that reason is the only light which nature has given to man: that our anxiety about futu-rity has made us imagine endlefs torments in a future world; and that princes, taking advantage of our weaknefs, have taken the management of our hopes and fears, and directed them to as to fuit their own purposes; and emancipation from the fear of death is declared to be the greatest of all deliverances. Queftions are put to the candidate, tending to difcover whether and how far he may be trufted, and what facrifices he is willing to make in fearch after truth.

This fhape given to the plaftic myfteries of Mafonry was much relified, and in a very fhort time this new, path was completely explored, and a new feries of degrees was added to the lift, viz. the Novice, and the Elû de la Verité, and the Sublime Philosophe. In the progrefs through these degrees, the Brethren must forget that they have formerly been Chevaliers de l'Orient, Chevaliers de l'Aigle, when the fymbols were all explained as typical of the life and immortality brought to light by the gospel. Indeed they are taught to class this among the other clouds which have b-en dispelled by the fun of reason. Even in the Chevalerie de l'Aigle there is a twofold explanation given of the fymbols, by which CHAP. I.

which a lively imagination may conceive the whole history and peculiar doctrines of the New Testament, as being typical of the final triumph of reason and philosophy over error. And perhaps this degree is the very first step in the plan of ILLUMINATION.

We are not to suppose that this was carried to extremity at once. But it is certain, that before 1743, it had become univerfal, and that the Lodges of Free Masons had become the places for making profelytes to every strange and obnoxious doctrine. Theurgy, Cofinegony, Cabala, and many whimfical and myftical doctrines which have been grafted on the diftinguishing tenets and the pure morality of the Jews and Chriftians, were subjects of frequent discussion in the Lodges. The celebrated Chevalier Ramfay had a great fhare in all this business. Affectionately attached to the family of Stuart, and to his native country, he had co-operated heartily with those who endeavoured to employ Mafonry in the fervice of the Pretender, and, availing himfelf of the pre-eminence given (at first perhaps as a courtly compliment) to Scotch Masonry, he laboured to fhew that it exifted, and indeed arole, during the Crulades, and that there really was either an order of chivalry whofe bufinefs it was to rebuild the Chriftian churches deftroyed by the Saracens, or that a fraternity of Scotch Mafons were thus employed in the eaft, under the protection of the Knights of St. John of Jerufalem. He found fome facts which were thought fufficient grounds for fuch an opinion, fuch as the building of the college of these Knights in London, called the Temple, which was actually done by the public Fraternity of Mafons who had been in the holy wars. It is chiefly to him that we are indebted for that rage of Mafonic chivalry which diffinguishes the French Free Masonry. Ramsay was as eminent for his piety as he was for his enthufiafm, but his opinions E were were fingular. His eminent learning, his elegant ta-lents, his amiable character, and particularly his effi-mation at court, gave great influence to every thing he faid on a fubject which was merely a matter of fashion and amutement. Whoever has attended much to human affairs, knows the eagerness with which men propagate all fingular opinions, and the delight which attends their favourable reception. None are more zealous than the apostles of infidelity and atheism. It is in human nature to catch with greedinefs any op-portunity of doing what lies under general reftraint. And if our apprehenfions are not completely quieted, in a cafe where our wifhes lead us ftrongly to fome fa-vourite but hazardous object, we are confcious of a kind of felf bullying. This naturally gets into our difcourfe, and in our eagerness to get the encourage-ment of joint adventurers, we enforce our tenets with an energy, and even a violence, that is very inconfiftent with the fubject in hand. If I am an Atheift, and my neighbour a Theist, there is furely nothing that should make me violent in my endeavours to rid him of his error. Yet how violent were the people of this party in France.

Thefe facts and obfervations fully account for the zeal with which all this patch-work addition to the fimple Free Mafonry of England was profecuted in France. It furprifes us Britons, who are accuftomed to confider the whole as a matter of amufement for young men, who are glad of any pretext for indulging in conviviality. We generally confider a man advanced in life with lefs refpect, if he fhows any ferious attachment to fuch things. But in France, the civil and religious reftraints in converfation made thefe fecret affemblies very precious; and they were much frequented by men of letters, who there found an opportunity of expreffing in fafety their diffatisfaction with with those restraints, and with that inferiority of rank and condition to which they were fubjected, and which appeared to themfelves fo inadequate to their own talents and merits. The Avocats au Parlement, the un-beneficed Abbés, the young men of no fortune, and the foidifant philosophers, formed a numerous band, frequented the Lodges, and there difcuffed every topic of religion and politics. Specimens of this occupation appeared from time to time in Collections of Difcourfes delivered by the Frere Orateur. I once had in my poffeffion two volumes of these discourses, which I now regret that I left in a Lodge on the continent, when my relish for Free Masonry had forsaken me. One of these is a discourse by Brother Robinet, delivered in the Loge des Chevaliers Bienfaisants de la Sainte Cité at Lyons, at a vifitation by the Grand Master the Duc de Chartres, afterwards Orleans and Egalité. In this difcourfe we have the germ.and fubstance of his noted work, La Nature, ou l'Homme moral et physique.* In another discourse, delivered by Brother Condorcet in the Loge des Philalethes at Strafbourg, we have the outlines of his posthumous work, Le Progres de l'Esprit bumain; and in another, delivered by Mirabeau in the Loge des Chevaliers Bienfaisants at Paris, we have a great deal of the levelling principles, and cosmopolitism, † which he thundered from the tribunes of the National Affembly. But the most remarkable performances of this kind are, the Archives Mystico-Hermetiques, and the Des Erreurs, et de la Verité. The first is considered as an account, hiftorical and dogmatical, of the procedure and system of the Loge des Chevaliers Bienfaisants at at Lyons. This was the most zealous and fystematical of all the cosmopolitical Lodges in France. It worked long under the patronage of its Grand Master the Duc des Chartres, asterwards Orleans, and at last Ph. Egalité. It fent out many affiliated Lodges, which were erected in various parts of the French dominions. The daughter Lodges at Paris, Strafbourg, Lille, Thouloufe, took the additional title of Philalethes. There arofe fome fchifms, as may be expected, in an Affociation where every man is encouraged to broach and to propagate any the most fingular opinion. Thefe fchifms were continued with fome heat, but were in a great measure repaired in Lodges which took the name of Amis reunis de la Verité. One of this denomination at Paris became very eminent. The mother Lodge at Lyons extended its correspondence into Germany, and other foreign countries, and fent constitutions or fystems, by which the Lodges conducted their operations.

I have not been able to trace the steps by which this Lodge acquired fuch an afcendancy; but I fee, that in 1769 and 1770, all the refined or philosophical Lodges in Alface and Lorraine united, and in a convention at Lyons, formally put themselves under the patronage of this Lodge, cultivated a continual correspondence, and confidered themselves as professing one Masonic Faith, sufficiently distinguishable from that of other Lodges. What this was we do not very diffinctly know. We can only infer is from fome historical circumstances. One of its favourite daughters, the Lodge Theodor von der guten Rath, at Munich, became fo remarkable for discourses dangerous to church and state, that the Elector of Bavaria, after repeated admonitions during a course of five or fix years, was obliged to supprefs it in 1786. Another of its suffragan Lodges at Regensburgh became exceedingly obnoxious to the ftate, ftate, and occafioned feveral commotions and infurrections. Another, at Paris, gradually refined into the Jacobin club—And in the year 1791, the Lodges in Alface and Lorraine, with those of Spire and Worms, invited Custine into Germany, and delivered Mentz into his hands.

When we reflect on these historical facts, we get fome key to the better understanding of the two performances which Imentioned as defcriptive of the opinions and occupations of this Sect of Free-Masons. The Archives Mystico-Hermetiques exhibit a very strange mixture of Mysticism, Theosophy, Cabalistic whim, real Science, Fanaticism, and Freethinking, both in religion and politics. They must not be confidered as an account of any settled system, but rather as annals of the proceedings of the Lodge, and abstracts of the ftrange doctrines which made their fuceffive appearance in it. But if an intelligent and cautious reader examine them attentively, he will fee, that the book is the work of one hand, and that all the wonders and oddities are caricatured, fo as to engross the general attention, while they also are twisted a little, fo that in one way or another they accord with a general fpirit of licentiousness in morals, religion, and politics. Although every thing is expressed decently, and with some caution and moderation, atheifm, materialifm, and difcontent with civil fubordination, pervade the whole. It is a work of great art. By keeping the ridicule and the danger of superstition and ignorance continually in view, the mind is captivated by the relief which free enquiry and communication of fentiment feems to fecure, and we are put off our guard against the risk of delusion, to which we are exposed when our judgment is warped by our passions.

The other book, "Des Erreurs et de la Verité," came from the fame school, and is a sort of holy scripture, ture, or at least a Talmud among the Free Masons of France. It is intended only for the initiated, and is indeed a mystery to any other reader. But as the object of it was to spread the favourite opinions of some enthusiastic Brethren, every thing is faid that does not directly betray the fecrets of the Order. It contains a fystem of Theosophy that has often appeared in the writings of philosophers, both in ancient and modern times. " All the intelligence and moral fentiment " that appears in the univerfe, either directly, as in " the minds of men, or indirectly, as an inference " from the marks of defign that we fee around us, fome " of which show us that men have acted, and many " more that fome other intelligence has acted, are con-" fidered as parts or portions of a general mais of ih-" telligence which exifts in the universe, in the fame " manner as matter exifts in it. This intelligence has " an inferutable connection with the material part of the universe, perhaps resembling the connection, 66 equally unfearchable, that fubfifts between the mind ¢C. and body of man; and it may be confidered as the CC. Soul of the World. It is this fubftance, the natural cc object of wonder and respect, that men have called 60 "God, and have made the object of religious worship. In doing fo they have fallen into gross mif-CC. takes, and have created for themfelves numberlefs cC unfounded hopes and fears, which have been the CC. " fource of fuperftition and fanaticism, the most deftructive plagues that have ever afflicted the human 66 race. The Soul of Man is feparated from the gec c neral mass of intelligence by some of the operations •• of nature, which we shall never understand, just as ¢¢. " water is raifed from the ground by evaporation, or " taken up by the root of a plant. And as the water, after an unsearchable train of changes, in which it 66 " fometimes makes part of a flower, fometimes part ic of

" of an animal, &c. is at last reunited, in its original " form, to the great mals of waters, ready to run over " the fame circle again; fo the Soul of Man, after " performing its office, and exhibiting all that train " of intellectual phenomena that we call human life, " is at laft fwallowed up in the great ocean of intelli-" gence." The author then may fing

- Felix qui potuit rerum cognoscere causa,Atque metus omnes et inexorabile fatum
- " Subjecit pedibus, strepitumque Acherontis avari."

For he has now got to his afylum. This deity of his may be the object of wonder, like every thing great and incomprehenfible, but not of worfhip, as the moral Governor of the universe. The hopes are at end, which reft on our notions of the immortality and individuality of the human foul, and on the encouragement which religion holds forth to believe, that improvement of the mind in the course of this life, by the exercise of wisdom and of virtuous dispositions, is but the beginning of an endless progress in all that can give delight to the rational and well-disposed mind. No relation now subsists between man and Deity that can warm the heart. But, as this is contrary to fome natural propenfity in the human mind, which in all ages and nations has panted after fome connection with Deity, the author strives to avail himself of fome cold principles of fymmetry in the works of nature, fome ill-fupported notions of propriety, and other fuch con-fiderations, to make this anima mundi an object of love and refpect. This is done in greater detail in another work, Tableau, des rapports entre l'Homme, Dieu, et l'Univers, which is undoubtedly by the fame hand. But the intelligent reader will readily fee, that fuch incongruous things cannot be reconciled, and that we can expect nothing here but fophiftry. The author proceeds, proceeds, in the next place, to confider man as related to man, and to trace out the path to happines in this life. Here we have the fame overstrained morality as in the other work, the fame univerfal benevolence, the fame lamentations over the miferable state of mankind, refulting from the oppreffion of the powerful, the great ones of the earth, who have combined against the happiness of mankind, and have succeeded, by debasing their minds, fo that they have become willing flaves. This could not have been brought about without the affiftance of fuperstition. But the princes of this world enlifted into their fervice the priefts, who exerted themfelves in darkening the understandings of men, and filled their minds with religious terrors. The altar became the chief pillar of the throne, and men were held in complete subjection. Nothing can recover them from this abject state but knowledge. While this difpels their fears, it will alfo fhow them their rights, and the way to attain them.

It deferves particularly to be remarked, that this fyftem of opinions (if fuch an inconfiftent mafs of affertions can be called a fyftem) bears a great refemblance to a performance of Toland's, publifhed in 1720, called Pantheifticon, feu Celebratio Sodalitii Socratici. It is an account of the principles of a Fraternity which he calls Socratica, and the Brothers Pantheiftæ. They are fuppofed to hold a Lodge, and the author gives a ritual of the procedure in this Lodge; the ceremonies of opening and flutting of the Lodge, the admiffion of Members into its different degrees, &c. Reafon is the Sun that illuminates the whole, and Liberty and Equality are the objects of their occupations.

We fhall fee afterwards that this book was fondly pufhed into Germany, translated, commented upon, and fo mifreprefented, as to call off the attention from the CHAP. I.

the real fpirit of the book, which is intentionally wrapped up in cabala and enigma. Mirabeau was at much pains to procure it notice; and it must therefore be confidered as a treasure of the cosmo-political opinions of the Association of Chevaliers Bienfaifants, Philalethes, and Amis Reunis, who were called the improved Lodges, working under the D. de Chartres—of these there were 266 in 1784. This will be found a very important remark. Let it also be recollected asterwards, that this Lodge of Lyons fent a deputy to a grand Convention in Germany in 1772, viz. Mr. Willermooz, and that the business was thought of such importance, that he remained there two years.

The book Des Erreurs et de la Verité, must therefore be confidered as a claffical book of these opinions. We know that it originated in the Loge des Chev. Bienfaifants at Lyons. We know that this Lodge ftood as it were at the head of French Free Masonry, and that the fictitious Order of Masonic Knights Templars was formed in this Lodge, and was confidered as the model of all the reft of this mimic chivalry. They proceeded fo far in this mummery, as even to have the clerical tonsure. The Duke of Orleans, his fon, the Elector of Bavaria, and fome other German Princes, did hot fcruple at this mummery in their own perfons. In all the Lodges of reception, the Brother Orator never failed to exclaim on the topics of fuperstition, blind to the exhibition he was then making, or indifferent as to the vile hypocrify of it. We have, in the lifts of Orators and Office-bearers, many names of perfons, who have had an opportunity at last of proclaiming their fentiments in public. The Abbé Sieyes was of the Lodge of Philalethes at Paris, and alfo at Lyons. Lequinio, author of the most profligate book that ever difgraced a press, the Prejuges vaincus par la Raison, was Warden in the Lodge Compaste Sociale. Despremenil, F

Despremenil, Bailly, Fauchet, Maury, Mounier, were of the fame system, though in different Lodges. They were called Martinists, from a St. Martin, who formed a schism in the system of the Chevaliers Bienfaisants, of which we have not any very precise account. Mer-cier gives some account of it in his Tableau de Paris, and in his Anné 2440. The breach alarmed the Brethren, and occafioned great heats. But it was healed, and the Fraternity took the name of Mifa du Renis, which is an anagram of des Amis Reunis. The Bithop of Autun, the man fo bepraifed as the benevolent Citizen of the World, the friend of mankind and of good order, was Senior Warden of another Lodge at Paris, established in 1786; (I think chiefly by Orleans and himfelf,) which afterwards became the Jacobin Club. In fhort, we may affert with confidence, that the Mafon Lodges in France were the hot-beds, where the feeds were fown, and tenderly reared, of all the pernicious doctrines which foon after choaked every moral or religious cultivation, and have made the Society worfe than a wafte, have made it a noifome marsh of human corruption, filled with every rank and poifonous weed.

These Lodges were frequented by perfons of all ranks, and of every profession. The idle and the frivolous found amusement, and glittering things to tickle their fatiated fancies. There they became the dupes of the declamations of the crafty and licentious Abbés, and writers of every denomination. Mutual encouragement in the indulgence of hazardous thoughts and opinions which flatter our wishes or propensities is a lure which few minds can refist. I believe that most men have felt this in some period of their lives. I can find no other way of accounting for the company that I have sometimes feen in a Mason Lodge. The Lodge de la Parfaite Intelligence at Liege, contained, in December December 1770, the Prince Bishop, and the greatest part of his Chapter, and all the Office-bearers were dignitaries of the church; yet a discourse given by the Brother Orator was as poignant a fatire on superstition and credulity, as if it had been written by Voltaire. It was under the auspices of this Lodge that the collection of discourses, which I mentioned above, was published, and there is no fault found with Brother Robinet, nor Brother Condorcet. Indeed the Trefonciers of Liege were proverbial, even in Brabant, for their Epicurism in the most extensive fense of the word.

Thus was corruption fpread over the kingdom under the mask of moral instruction. For these discourses were full of the most refined and strained morality, and florid paintings of Utopian felicity, in a ftate where all are Brothers and citizens of the world. But alas! thefe wire-drawn principles feem to have had little influence on the hearts, even of those who could best display their beauties. Read the tragedies of Voltaire, and fome of his grave performances in profe-What man is there who feems better to know his Master's will? No man expresses with more propriety, with more exactness, the feelings of a good mind. No man feems more fenfible of the immutable obligation of justice and of truth. Yet this man, in his transactions with his bookfellers, with the very men to whom he was immediately indebted for his affluence and his fame, was repeatedly, nay inceffantly, guilty of the meaneft, the vileft tricks. When he fold a work for an enormous price to one bookseller, (even to Cramer, whom he really refpected,) he took care that a furreptitious edition should appear in Holland, almost at the fame moment. Proof-sheets have been traced from Ferney to Amfterdam. When a friend of Cramer's expostulated with Voltaire on the injustice of this conduct, he faid, grinning, Ob le bon Cramer-eb bien-il n'a n'a que d' etre du parti-he may take a share-he will not give me a livre the less for the first piece I offer him. Where shall we see more tenderness, more honour, more love of every thing that is good and fair, than in Diderot's Pere de Famille?—Yet this man did not fcruple to fell to the Empress of Russia an immense library, which he did not poffefs, for an enormous price, having got her promise that it should remain in his possession in Paris during his life. When her ambassador wanted to see it, after a year or two's payments, and the vifitation could be no longer flaved off, Diderot was obliged to fet off in a hurry, and run through all the bookfellers fhops in Germany, to help him to fill his empty fhelves. He had the good for-tune to fave appearances—but the trick took air, be-caufe he had been niggardly in his attention to the am-baffador's fecretary. This, however, did not hinder him from honouring his Imperial pupil with a vifit. He expected adoration, as the light of the world, and was indeed received by the Ruffian courtiers with all the childifh fordness that they feel for every Parifer the childish fondness that they feel for every Parisian mode. But they did not understand him, and as he did not like to lofe money at play, they did not long court his company. He found his pupil too clear fighted. Ces philosophes, faid she, sont beaux, vús de loin; mais de plus prés, le diamant parait crystal. He had contrived a poor story, by which he hoped to get his daughter married in parade, and portioned by her Majesty-but it was seen through, and he was disappointed.

When we fee the inefficacy of this refined humanity on thefe two apofiles of philofophical virtue, we fee ground for doubting of the propriety and expediency of trufting entirely to it for the peace and happinefs of a ftate, and we fhould be on our guard when we liften to the florid fpeeches of the Brother Orator, and his congracongratulations on the emancipation from fuperflition and oppreffion, which will in a fhort time be effectuated by the Chevaliers Bienfaifants, the Philalethes, or any other fect of cosmo-political Brethren.

I do not mean by all this to maintain, that the Mafon Lodges were the fole corrupters of the public mind in France.-No.-In all nations that have made much progrefs in cultivation, there is a great tendency to corruption, and it requires all the vigilance and exertions of magistrates, and of moral instructors, to prevent the fpreading of licentious principles and maxims of conduct. They arife naturally of themfelves, as weeds in a rich foil; and, like weeds, they are pernicious, only becaufe they are, where they fhould not be, in a cultivated field. Virtue is the cultivation of the human foul, and not the mere poffession of good difpofitions; all men have thefe in fome degree, and occafionally exhibit them. But virtue fuppofes exertion; and, as the hufbandman must be incited to his laborious talk by fome cogent motive, fo must man be prompted to that exertion which is necessary on the part of every individual for the very existence of a great fociety: For man is indolent, and he is luxurious; he wifhes for enjoyment, and this with little trouble. The lefs fortunate envy the enjoyments of others, and repine at their own inability to obtain the like. They fee the idle in affluence. Few, even of good men, have the candour, nay, I may call it the wifdom, to think on the activity and the labour which had procured those comforts to the rich or to their ancestors; and to believe that they are idle only becaufe they are wealthy, but would be active if they were needy .---Such spontaneous reflexions cannot be expected in perfons who are engaged in unceafing labour, to procure a very moderate share (in their estimation at least) of the comforts of life. Yet fuch reflexions would, in the the main, be just, and furely they would greatly tend to quiet the minds of the unfuccefsful.

This excellent purpofe may be greatly forwarded by a national eftablishment for moral instruction and admonition; and if the public inftructors should add all the motives to virtuous moderation which are fuggested by the confiderations of genuine religion, every advice would have a tenfold influence. Religious and moral inftructions are therefore, in their own nature, unequivocal fupports to that moderate exertion of the authority arising from civil fubordination, which the most refined philanthropist or cosmo-polite acknowledges to be necessary for the very existence of a great and cultivated fociety. I have never teen a scheme of Utopian happiness that did not contain some system of education, and I cannot conceive any fystem of education of which moral instruction is not a principal part. Such establishments are dictates of nature, and obtrude themselves on the mind of every person who begins to form plans of civil union. And in all existing focieties they have indeed been formed, and are confidered as the greatest corrector and foother of those difcontents that are unavoidable in the minds of the unfuccessful and the unfortunate. The magistrate, therefore, whose professional habits lead him frequently to exert himfelf for the maintenance of public peace, cannot but fee the advantages of fuch stated remem. brancers of our duty. He will therefore fupport and cherish this public establishment, which so evidently affifts him in his beneficent and important labours.

But all the evils of fociety do not fpring from the difcontents and the vices of the poor. The rich come in for a large and a confpicuous fhare. They frequently abufe their advantages. Pride and haughty behaviour on their part rankle in the breafts, and affect the tempers of their inferiors, already fretted by the

the hardships of their own condition. The rich alfo are luxurious; and are often needy. Grafping at every mean of gratification, they are inattentive to the rights of inferiors whom they defpife, and, defpifing, opprefs. Perhaps their own fuperiority has been acquired by in-juffice. Perhaps most fovereignties have been acquired by opprefion. Princes and Rulers are but men; as fuch, they abufe many of their greateft bleffings. Ob-ferving that religious hopes make the good refigned under the hardships of the present scene, and that its terrors frequently reftrain the bad; they avail themfelves of these observations, and support religion as an engine of state, and a mean of their own fecurity. But they are not contented with its real advantages; and they are much more afiaid of the refentment and the crimes of the offended profligate, than of the murmurs of the fuffering worthy. Therefore they encourage fuperstition, and call to their aid the vices of the priesthood. The priefts are men of like paffions as other men, and it is no ground of peculiar blame that they alfo frequently yield to the temptations of their fituation. They are encouraged to the indulgence of the love of influence natural to all men, and they heap terror upon terror, to fubdue the minds of men, and darken their understandings. Thus the most honourable of all employments, the moral instruction of the state, is degraded to a vile trade, and is practifed with all the deceit and rapacity of any other trade; and religion, from being the honour and the fafeguard of nation, becomes its greatest difgrace and curfe.

When a nation has fallen into this lamentable ftate, it is extremely difficult to reform. Although nothing would fo immediately and fo completely remove all ground of complaint, as the re-eftablishing private virtue, this is of all others the least likely to be adopted. The really worthy, who fee the mischief where it actually actually is, but who view this life as the school of improvement, and know that man is to be made perfect through fuffering, are the last perfons to complain. The worthlefs are the most discontented, the most noify in their complaints, and the least fcrupulous about the means of redrefs. Not to improve the nation, but to advance themfelves, they turn the attention to the abuses of power and influence. And they begin their attack where they think the place most defenceless, and where perhaps they expect affiftance from a difcontented garrison. They attack superstition, and are not at all folicitous that true religion shall not fuffer along with it. It is not perhaps, with any direct intention to ruin the state, but merely to obtain indulgence for themfelves and the co-operation of the wealthy. They expect to be liftened to by many who wish for the fame indulgence; and thus it is that religious free-thinking is generally the first step of anarchy and revolution. For in a corrupted state, perfons of all ranks have the fame licentious wifhes, and if fuperstitious fear be really an ingredient of the human mind, it requires some struggle to shake it off. Nothing is fo effectual as mutual encouragement, and therefore all join against priest-craft; even the rulers forget their interest, which should lead them to support it. In fuch a ftate, the pure morality of true religion vanishes from the fight. There is commonly no remains of it in the religion of the nation, and therefore all goes together.

Perhaps there never was a nation where all these cooperating causes had acquired greater strength than in France. Oppressions of all kinds were at a height. The luxuries of life were enjoyed exclusively by the upper classes, and this in the highest degree of refinement; fo that the defires of the rest were whetted to the utmost. Religion appeared in its worst form, and seemed calculated culated folely for procuring establishments for the younger fons of the infolent and ufelefs nobleffe. The morals of the higher orders of the clergy and of the laity were equally corrupted. Thousands of literary men were excluded by their station from all hopes of advancement to the more respectable offices in the church. These vented their discontents as far as there was fafety, and were encouraged by many of the upper claffes, who joined them in their fatires on the priefthood. The clergy opposed them, it is true, but feebly, becaufe they could not support their opposition by examples of their own virtuous behaviour, but were always obliged to have recourfe to the power of the church, the very object of hatred and difgust. The whole nation became infidel; and when in a few inftances a worthy Curé uttered the small still voice of true religion, it was not heard amidit the general noife of fatire and reproach. The misconduct of administration, and the abuse of the public treasures, were every day growing more impudent and glaring, and exposed the government to continual criticism. But it was still. too powerful to fuffer this to proceed to extremities ; while therefore infidelity and loofe fentiments of morality paffed unpunished, it was still very hazardous to publish any thing against the state. It was in this refpect, chiefly, that the Mafon Lodges contributed to the diffemination of dangerous opinions, .and they were employed for this purpose all over the kingdom. This is not an affertion hazarded merely on account of its probability. Abundant proof will appear by and by, that the most turbulent characters in the nation frequented the Lodges. We cannot doubt, but that under this covent they indulged their factious dispositions ; ray, we shall find the greatest part of the Lodges of France, converted, in the course of a very few weeks, into corresponding political focieties.

But

But it is now time to turn our eyes to the progrefs of Free Mafonry in Germany and the north of Europe; there it took a more ferious turn. Free Masonry was imported into Germany fomewhat later than into France. The first German Lodge that we have any account of is that at Cologne, erected in 1716, but very soon suppressed. Before the year 1725 there were many, both in Protestant and Catholic Germa-Those of Wetzlar, Frankfort on the Mavne, ny. Brunfwick, and Hamburg, are the oldeft, and their priority is doubtful. All of them received their inftitution from England, and had patents from a mother Lodge in London. All feem to have got the mystery through the fame channel, the banished friends of the Stuart family. Many of these were Catholics, and entered into the fervice of Auftria and the Catholic princes.

The true hospitality, that is no where more confpicuous than in the character of the Germans, made this inftitution a most agreeable and useful passport to these gentlemen; and as many of them were in military stations, and in garrison, they found it a very easy matter to fet up Lodges in all parts of Germany. These afforded a very agreeable pastime to the officers, who had little to occupy them, and were already accustomed to a fubordination which did not affect their vanity on account of family diffinctions. As the Enfign and the General were equally gentlemen, the allegory or play of universal Brotherhood was neither novel nor difgusting. Free Masonry was then of the fimpleft form, confifting of the three degrees of Apprentice, Fellow-craft, and Master. It is remarkable, that the Germans had been long accustomed to the word, the fign, and the gripe of the Masons, and some other handicraft trades. In many parts of Germany there was a diffinction of operative Masons into Wort-Maurers

CHAP. I.

Maurers and Schrift-Maurers. The Wort-Maurers had no other proof to give of their having been regularly brought up to the trade of builders, but the word and figns; the Schrift-Maurers had written indentures to fhew. There are extant and in force, boroughlaws, enjoining the Mafters of Masons to give employment to journeymen who had the proper words and fign. In particular it appears, that fome cities had more extensive privileges in this respect than others. The word given at Wetzlar, the seat of the great council of revision for the empire, entitled the poffeffor to work over the whole empire. We may infer from the processes and decisions in some of those municipal courts, that a mafter gave a word and token for each year's progrefs of his apprentice. He gave the word of the incorporated Imperial city or borough on which he depended, and alfo a word peculiar to himfelf, by which all his own pupils could recognife each other. This mode of recognisance was probably the only document of education in old times, while writing was confined to a very fmall part of the community. When we reflect on the nature of the German empire, a confederation of finall independent states, we fee that this profession cannot keep pace with the other mechanic arts, unless its practitioners are invefted with greater privileges than others. Their great works exceed the strength of the immediate neighbourhood, and the workmen must be brought together from a diftance. Their affociation must therefore be more cared for by the public.*

When English Free Masonry was carried into Germany, it was hospitably received. It required little effort

* Note. The Wort or Grüßs-Maurer were abolished by an Imperial edict in 1731, and none were intitled to the privileges of the corporation but such as could shew written indentures.

THE SCHISMS IN

effort to give it respectability, and to make it the occupation of a gentleman, and its fecrets and mysteries were not fuch novelties as in France. It fpread rapidly, and the fimple topic of Brotherly love was fufficient for recommending it to the honeft and hospitable Germans. But it foon took a very different turn. The German character is the very opposite of frivo-lity. It tends to ferioufness, and requires ferious occupation. The Germans are eminent for their turn for invefligation; and perhaps they indulge this to excefs. We call them plodding and dull, becaufe we have little relish for enquiry for its own fake. But this is furely the occupation of a rational nature, and deferves any name but flupidity. At the fame time it must be acknowledged, that the spirit of enquiry requires regulation as much as any propenfity of the human mind. But it appears that the Germans are not nice in their choice of their objects; it appears that fingularity, and wonder, and difficulty of refearch, are to them irrefiftible recommendations and incitements. They have always exhibited a ftrong predilection for every thing that is wonderful, or folemn, or terrible; and in spite of the great progress which men have made in the course of these two last centuries, in the knowledge of nature, a progrefs too in which we should be very unjust if we did not acknowledge that the Germans have been generally in the foremost ranks, the gross absurdities of magic, exorcism, witchcraft, fortune-telling, transmutation of metals, and universal medicine, have always had their zealous partizans, who have liftened with greedy ears to the nonfenfe and jargon of fanatics and cheats; and though they every day faw examples of many who had been ruined or rendered ridiculous by their credulity, every new pretender to fecrets found numbers ready to liften to him, and to run over the fame courfe.

CHAP. I.

Free Mafonry, professing mysteries, instantly roufed all these people, and the Lodges appeared to the adventurers who wanted to profit by the enthufiasm or the avarice of their dupes, the fittest places in the world for the scene of their operations. The Rofycrucians were the first who availed themselves of the opportunity. This was not the Society which had appeared formerly under that name, and was now extinct, but a fet of Alchymifts, pretenders to the transmutation of metals and the universal medicine, who, the better to inveigle their votaries, had mixed with their own tricks a good deal of the abfurd fuperflitions of that fect, in order to give a greater air of mystery to the whole, to protract the time of inftruction, and to afford more room for evalions, by making fo many difficult conditions necessary for perfecting the grand work, that the unfortunate gull, who had thrown away his time and his money, might believe that the failure was owing to his own incapacity or unfitnefs for being the poffesior of the grand fecret. These cheats found it convenient to make Masonry one of their conditions, and by a fmall degree of art, perfuaded their pupils that they were the only true Masons. These Rofycrucian Lodges were foon eftablished, and became numerous, becaufe their mysteries were addreffed, both to the curiofity, the fenfuality, and the avarice of men. They became a very formidable band, adopting the conftitution of the Jesuits, dividing the Fraternity into circles, each under the management of its own fuperior, known to the prefident, but unknown to the individuals of the Lodges. These superiors were connected with each other in a way known only to themfelves, and the whole was under one General. At least this is the account which they wish to be believed. If it be just, nothing but the abfurdity of the oftenfible motives of their occupations could have prevented vented this combination from carrying on fehemes big with hazard to the peace of the world. But the Rofycrucian Lodges have always been confidered by other Free Mafons as bad Societies, and as grofs fchifmatics. This did not hinder, however, their alchymical and medical fecrets from being frequently introduced into the Lodges of fimple Free Mafonry; and in like manner, exorcifm, or ghoft-raifing, magic, and other grofs fuperflitions, were often held out in their meetings as attainable myfteries, which would be immenfe acquifitions to the Fraternity, without any neceffity of admitting along with them the religious deliriums of the Rofycrucians.

In 1743, Baron Hunde, a gentleman of honourable character and independent fortune, was in Paris, where he faid he had got acquainted with the Earl of Kilmarnock and fome other gentlemen who were about the Pretender, and learned from them that they had fome wonderful fecrets in their Lodges. He was admitted, through the medium of that nobleman, and of a Lord Clifford, and his Masonic patent was figned George (faid to be the fignature of Kilmarnock). Hunde had attached himfelf to the fortunes of the Pretender, in hopes (as he fays himfelf) of rifing in the world under his protection. The mighty fecret was this. " When the Order of Knights Templars was abolith-" ed by Philip the Fair, and cruelly perfecuted, fome, " worthy perions escaped, and took refuge in the " Highlands of Scotland, where they concealed them-" selves in caves. These perfons possessed the true 66 fecrets of Masonry, which had always been in that " Order, having been acquired by the Knights, during their fervices in the Eaft, from the pilgrims c٢ " whom they occafionally protected or delivered. The " Chevaliers de la Rose-Croix continued to have the " fame duties as formerly, though robbed of their « emolu" emoluments. In fine, every true Mafon is a Knight " Templar." It is very true that a clever fancy can accommodate the ritual of reception of the Chevalier de l'Epée, &c. to fomething like the inftitution of the Knights Templars, and perhaps this explanation of young Zerobabel's pilgrimage, and of the rebuilding of the Temple by Ezra, is the most fignificant explanation that has been given of the meagre fymbols of Free Mafonry.

When Baron Hunde returned to Germany, he exhibited to fome friends his extensive powers for propagating this fystem of Masonry, and made a few Knights. But he was not very active. Probably the failure of the Pretender's attempt to recover the throne of his ancestors had put an end to Hunde's hopes of making a figure. In the mean time Free Masonry was cultivated with zeal in Germany, and many adventurers found their advantage in supporting particular fchisms.

But in 1756, or 1757, a complete revolution took place. The French officers who were prifoners at large in Berlin, undertook, with the affurance peculiar to their nation, to instruct the fimple Germans in every thing that embellishes fociety. They faid, that the homespun Free Masonry, which had been imported from England, was fit only for the unpolifhed minds of the British; but that in France it had grown into an elegant system, fit for the profession of Gentlemen. Nay, they faid, that the English were ignorant of true Masonry, and possessed nothing but the introduction to it; and even this was not underftood by them. When the ribbands and ftars, with which the French had ornamented the Order, were fnown to the Germans, they could not refift the enchantment. A Mr. Rofa, a French commiffary, brought from Paris a complete waggon load of Masonic ornaments, which were were all diftributed before it had reached Berlin, and he was obliged to order another, to furnish the Lodge's of that city. It became for a while a most profitable business to many French officers and commiffaries difperfed over Germany, having little elfe to do. Every body gaped for instruction, and these kind teachers were always ready to bestow it. In half a year Free Masonry underwent a complete revolution all over Germany, and Chevaliers multiplied without number. The Rolaic fystem was a gospel to the Masons, and the poor British system was despised. But the new Lodges of Berlin, as they had been the teachers of the whole empire, wanted also to be the governors, and infifted on complete subjection from all the others. This ftartled the Free Masons at a distance, and awakened them from their golden dreams. Now began a ftruggle for dominion and for independency. This made the old Lodges think a little about the whole affair. The refult of this was a counter revolution. Though no man could pretend that he understood the true meaning of Free Masonry, its origin, its history, or its real aim, all faw that the interpretations of their hieroglyphics, and the rituals of the new degrees imported from France, were quite gratuitous. It appeared, therefore, that the fafeft thing for them was an appeal to the birth-place of Masonry. They sent to London for instructions. There they learned, that nothing was acknowledged for genuine unfophifticated Masonry but the three degrees; and that the mother Lodge of London alone could, by her instructions, prevent the most dangerous schiftns and innovations. Many Lodges, therefore, applied for patents and inftructions. Patents were eafily made out, and most willingly fent to the zealous Brethren; and thefe were thankfully received and paid for. But inftruction was not fo eafy a matter. At that time we had nothing but but the book of conftitutions, drawn up about 1720, by Anderfon and Defaguilliers, two perfons of little education, and of low manners, who had aimed at little more than making a pretext, not altogether contemptible, for a convivial meeting. This, however, was received with refpect. We are apt to fmile at grave men's being fatisfied with fuch coarfe and fcanty fare. But it was of ufe, merely becaufe it gave an oftenfible reafon for refifting the defpotifm of the Lodges of Berlin. Several refpectable Lodges, particularly that of Frankfort on the Mayne, that of Brunfwick, that of Wetzlar, and the Royal York of Berlin, refolutely adhered to the Englifh fyftem, and denied themfelves all the enjoyment of the French degrees, rather than acknowledge the fupremacy of the Rofaic Lodges of Berlin. About the year 1764 a new revolution took place.

An adventurer, who called himfelf Johnfon, and paffed himself for an Englishman, but who was really a German or Bohemian named Leucht, faid that he was ambaffador from the Chapter of Knights Templars at Old Aberdeen in Scotland, fent to teach the Germans what was true Masonry. He pretended to transmute metals, and fome of the Brethren declared that they had feen him do it repeatedly. This reached Baron Hunde, and brought back all his former enthusiafm. There is fomething very dark in this part of the hiftory; for in a little Johnson told his partifans that the only point he had to inform them of was, that Baron Hunde was the Grand Mafter of the 7th province of Mafonry, which included the whole of Germany, and the royal dominions of Prussia. He showed them a map of the Mafonic Empire arranged into provinces, each of which had diftinguishing emblems. These are all taken from an old forgotten and infignificant book, Typotii Symbola Divina et Humana, published in 1601. There is not the least trace in this book either of Masonry of Tem-T-T plars, plars, and the emblems are taken out without the imallest ground of felection. Some inconfistency with the former magnificent promifes of Johnfon startled them at first, but they acquiesced and submitted to Baron Hunde as Grand Mafter of Germany. Soon after Johnson turned out to be a cheat, escaped, was taken, and put in prison, where he died. Yet this seems not to have ruined the credit of Baron Hunde. He erected Lodges, gave a few fimple instructions, all in the fystem of English Masonry, and promised, that when they had approved themfelves as good Mafons, he would then impart the mighty fecret. After two or three years of noviciate, a convention was held at Altenberg; and he told them that his whole fecret was, that every true Mason was a Knight Templar. They were aftonished, and disappointed; for they expected in general that he would teach them the philosopher's stone, or ghost-raising, or magic. Aster much difcontent, falling out, and dispute, many Lodges united in this fystem, made fomewhat moderate and palatable, under the name of the STRICT DISCIPLINARIANS, Strickten Observanz. It was acceptable to many, becaufe they infifted that they were really Knights, properly confecrated, though without temporalities; and they ferioufly fet themfelves about forming a fund which should fecure the Order in a landed property and revenue, which would give them a respectable civil exiftence. Hunde declared that his whole eftate should devolve on the Order. But the vexations which he afterwards met with, and his falling in love with a lady who prevailed on him to become Roman Catholic, made him alter his intention. The Order went on, however, and acquired confiderable credit by the ferious regularity of their proceedings; and, although in the mean time a new apostle of Mysteries, a Dr. Zinzendorff, one of the Strift Observanz, introduced a new. fystem, fystem, which he faid was from Sweden, dislinguished by some of the mystical doctrines of the Swedenborgh fect, and though the fystem obtained the Royal patronage, and a National Lodge was established at Berlin by patent, still the Tempelorden, or Orden des Stritten Observanz, continued to be very respectable. The German gentry were better pleased with a Grand Master of their own choosing, than with any imposed on them by authority.

During this state of things, one Stark, a Protestant divine, well known in Germany by his writings, made another trial of public faith. One Gugomos, (a private gentleman, but who would pass for fon to a King of Cyprus), and one Schropfer, keeper of a coffeehouse at Nuremberg, drew crowds of Free Masons around them, to learn ghoft-raifing, exorcifm, and alchymy. Numbers came from a great diffance to Weisbad to see and learn these mysteries, and Free Mufonry was on the point of another revolution. Dr. Stark was an adept in all these things, and had contended with Cagliostro in Courland for the palm of superiority. He faw that this deception could not long ftand its ground. He therefore came forward, at a convention at Braunschweig in 1772, and faid to the Strict Difciplinarians or Templars, That he was of their Order, but of the spiritual department, and was deputed by the Chapter of K-m-d-t in Scotland, where he was Chancellor of the Congregation, and had the name of Archidemides, Eques ab Aquila fulva: That this Chapter had the superintendance of the Order: That they alone could confecrate the Knights, or the unknown superiors; and that he was deputed to instruct them in the real principles of the Order, and impart its ineftimable fecrets, which could not be known to Baron Hunde, as he would readily acknowledge when he should converse with him. Johnson, he faid, had been a cheat, a cheat, and probably a murderer. He had got fome knowledge from papers which he must have stolen from a miffionary, who had difappeared, and was probably killed. Gugomos and Schropfer must have had fome fimilar information; and Schropfer had even deceived him for a time. He was ready to execute his commiffion, upon their coming under the neceffary obligations of fecrecy and of fubmiffion. Hunde (whofe name in the Order was the Eques ab Enfe) acquiefced at once, and proposed a convention, with full powers to decide and accept. But a Schubart, a gentleman of character, who was treasurer to the Templar Masons, and had an employment which gave him confiderable influence in the Order, strongly diffuaded them from fuch a meafure. The most unqualified submission to unknown fuperiors, and to conditions equally unknown, was required previous to the fmallest communication, or any knowledge of the powers which Archidemides had to treat with them. Many meetings were held, and many attempts were made to learn fomething of this fpiritual court, and of what they might expect from Dr. Stark, Baron Weggenfak, Baron von Rathem. ven, and fome others of his coadjutors in the Lodges at Koningsberg in Prussia, and at Wismar, were received into the Order. But in vain-nothing was obtained from these ghostly Knights but some infignificant ceremonials of receptions and confectations. Of this kind of novelties they were already heartily fick; and though they all panted after the expected wonders, they were fo much frightened by the unconditional fubmission, that they could come to no agreement, and the fecrets of the Scotch Congregation of K-m-d-t ftill remain with Dr. Stark. They did, however, a fenfible thing; they fent a deputation to Old Aberdeen, to enquire after the caves where their venerable myfteries were known, and their treasures were hid. They had had, as they thought, merited fome more confidence; for they had remitted annual contributions to these unknown fuperiors, to the amount of fome thousands of rix dollars. But alas! their ambaffadors found the Free Masons of Old Aberdeen ignorant of all this, and as eager to learn from the ambaffadors what was the true origin and meaning of Free Masonry, of which they knew nothing but the fimple tale of Old Hiram. This broke Stark's credit; but he still infifted on the reality of his commission, and faid that the Brethren at Aberdeen were indeed ignorant, but that he had never faid otherwife; their expectations from that quarter had refted on the fcraps purloined by Johnson. He reminded them of a thing well known to themfelves; that one of them had been fent for by a dying nobleman to receive papers on this fubject, and that his vifit having been delayed a few hours by an unavoidable accident, he found all burnt but a fragment of a capitulary, and a thing in cypher, part of which he (Dr. Stark) had explained to them. They had employed another gentleman, a H. Wachter, to make fimilar enquiries in Italy, where Schropfer and others (even Hunde) had told them great fecrets were to be obtained from the Pretender's fecretary Approfi, and others. Wachter told them, that all this was a fiction, but that he had feen at Florence fome Brethren from the Holy Land, who really poffeffed wonderful fecrets, which he was willing to impart, on proper conditions. Thefe, however, they could not accede to; but they were cruelly tortured by feeing Wachter, who had left Germany in fober circumstances, now a man of great wealth and expence. He would not acknowledge that he had got the fecret of gold-making from the Afiatic Brethren; but faid that no man had any right to afk him how he had come by his fortune. It was enough that he behaved honorably, rably, and owed no man any thing. He broke off all connections with them, and left them in great diftrefs about their Order, and panting after his fecrets. Rifum teneatis amici.

Stark, in revenge for the opposition he had met with from Schubart, left no ftone unturned to hurt him with his Brethren, and fucceeded, fo that he left them in difgust. Hunde died about this time. A book appeared, called, The Stumbling Block and Rock of Offence, which betrayed (by their own confession) the whole fecrets of the Order of Templars, and soon made an end of it, as far as it went beyond the simple English Masonry.

Thus was the faith of Free Mafons quite unhinged in Germany. But the rage for myfteries and wonder was not in the leaft abated; and the habits of thefe fecret Affemblies were becoming every day more craving. Diffenfion and fchifm was multiplying in every quarter; and the Inftitution, inftead of being an incitement to mutual complaifance and Brotherly love, had become a fource of contention, and of bitter enmity. Not fatisfied with defending the propriety of its own Inftitutions, each Syftem of Free Mafonry was bufy in enticing away the partifans of other Syftems, fhut their Lodges againft each other, and proceeded even to wilify and perfecute the adherents of every Syftem but their own.

Thefe animofities arofe chiefly from the quarrels about precedency, and the arrogance (as it was thought) of the patent Lodge of Berlin, in pretending to have any authority in the other parts of the empire. But thefe pretenfions were not the refult of mere vanity. The French importers of the new degrees, always true to the glory of their nation, hoped by this means to fecure the dependence even of this frivolous fociety; perhaps they might forefee political ufes and benefits which which might arife from it. One thing is worth notice : The French Lodges had all emanated from the great Confederation under the Duke de Chartres; and, even if we had no other proof, we might prefume that they would cultivate the fame principles that characterifed that Sect. But we are certain that infidelity and laxity of moral principles were prevalent in the Rofaic Lodges, and that the observation of this corruption had offended many of the fober old-fashioned Lodges, and was one great cause of any check that was given to the brilliant Masonry of France. It is the observation of this circumstance, in which they all refembled, and which foon ceafed to be a diffinction, becaufe it pervaded the other Lodges, that has induced me to expatiate more on this hiftory of Free Masonry in Germany, than may appear to my readers to be adequate to the importance of Free Mafonry in the general fubject-matter of thefe pages. But I hope that it will appear in the course of my narration that I have not given it a greater value than it deferves.

About this very time there was a great revolution of the public mind in Germany, and fcepticifin, infidelity, and irreligion, not only were prevalent in the minds and manners of the wealthy and luxurious, and of the profligate of lower ranks, but began to appear in the productions of the prefs. Some circumstances, peculiar to Germany, occasioned these declensions from the former acquiescence in the faith of their forefathers to become more uniform and remarkable than they would otherwife have been. The confeffions of Germany are the Roman Catholic, the Lutheran, (which they call Protestant,) and the Calvinist, (which they call Reformed). Thefe are profeffed in many finall contiguous principalities, and there is hardly one of them in which all the three have not free exercise. The defire of making profelytes is natural to all ferious prefeffors fessors of a rational faith, and was frequently exercised. The Roman Catholics are fuppofed by us to be parti-cularly zealous; and the Protestants (Lutherans and Calvinists) were careful to oppose them by every kind of argument, among which those of ridicule and reproach were not spared. The Catholics accused them of infi-delity respecting the fundamental doctrines of Christianity which they profeffed to believe, and even with refpect to the doctrines of natural religion. This ac-culation was long very flightly supported; but, of late, by better proofs. The spirit of free enquiry was the great boast of the Protostants, and the only support against the Catholics, fecuring them both in their reli-gious and civil rights. It was therefore encouraged by their governments. It is not to be wondered at that it fhould be indulged to excefs, or improperly, even by ferious men, liable to error, in their difputes with the Catholics. In the progress of this contest, even their own Confessions did not escape criticism, and it was afferted that the Reformation which those Confessions express was not complete. Further Reformations were proposed. The Scriptures, the foun-dation of our taith, were examined by clergymen of very different capacities, dispositions, and views, till by explaining, correcting, allegorifing, and otherwife twifting the Bible, men's minds had hardly any thing left to reft on as a doctrine of revealed religion. This encouraged others to go farther, and to fay that reve-lation was a folecism, as plainly appeared by the irreconcileable differences among those Enlighteners (so they were called) of the public, and that man had nothing to truft to but the dictates of natural reafon. Another fet of writers, proceeding from this as a point already fettled, proferibed all religion whatever, and openly taught the doctrines of materialifm and atheifm. Most of these innovations were the work of Protestant divines divines, from the caufes that I have mentioned. Teller, Semler, Eberhardt, Leffing, Bahrdt, Riem, and Shultz, had the chief hand in all thefe innovations. But no man contributed more than Nicholai, an eminent and learned bookfeller in Berlin. He has been for many years the publisher of a periodical work, called the General German Library, (Algemein deutsche Bibliothek,) confissing of original differtations, and reviews of the writings of others. The great merit of this work, on account of many learned differtations which appear in it, has procured it much influence on that class of readers whose leifure or capacity did not allow them a more profound kind of reading. This is the bulk of readers in every country. - Nicholai gives a decided preference to the writings of the Enlighteners, and in his reviews treats them with particular notice, makes the public fully acquainted with their works, and makes the most favourable comments; whereas the performances of their opponents, or more properly speaking, the defenders of the National Creeds, are neglected, omitted, or barely mentioned, or they are criticifed with every feverity of ridicule and reproach. He fell upon a very fure method of rendering the orthodox writers difagreeable to the public, by reprefenting them as the abetters of fuperstition, and as fecret Jesuits. He afferted, that the abolition of the Order of Loycla is only apparent. The Brethren still retained their connection, and most part of their property, under the fecret patronage of Catholic Princes. They are, therefore, in every corner, in every habit and character, working with unwearied zeal for the reftoration of their empire. He raifed a general alarm, and made a journey through Germany, hunting for Jefuits, and for this purpofe, became Free Mafon and Rofycrucian, being introduced by his friends Gedicke and Biefter, clergymen, clergymen, publishers of the Berlin Monatschrift, and most zealous promoters of the new doctrines. This favour he has repaid at his return, by betraying the mysteries of the Lodges, and by much bitter fatire. His journey was published in several volumes, and is full of frightful Jesuitisms. This man, as I have faid, found the greatest success in his method of flandering the defenders of Bible-Christianity, by representing them as concealed Jesuits. But, not contented with open discussion, he long ago published a fort of romance, called Sebaldus Nothanker, in which thefe divines are introduced under feigned names, and made as ridiculous and detestable as possible. All this was a good trading job; for sceptical and free-thinking writings have every where a good market; and Nicholai was not only reviewer, but publisher, having presses in different cities of the Empire. The immenfe literary manufacture of Germany, far exceeding that of any nation of Europe, is carried on in a very particular way. The books go in fheets to the great fairs of Leipfic and Frankfort, twice a-year. The bookfellers meet there, and fee at one glance the ftate of literature; and having fpeculated and made their bargains, the books are instantly disperfed through every part of the Empire, and appear at once in all quarters. Although every Principality has an officer for licenfing, it is impoffible to prevent the currency of a performance, although it may be prohibited; for it is to be had by the carrier at three or four miles diftance in another state. By this mode of traffic, a plot may be formed, and actually has been formed, for giving any particular turn to the literature of the country. There is an excellent work printed at Bern by the author Heinzmann, a bookfeller, called, Appeal to my Country, concerning a Combination of Writers, and Bookfellers, to rule the Literature of Germany, and form the

the Public Mind into a Contempt for the Religion and Civil Establishments of the Empire. It contains a historical account of the publications in every branch of literature for about thirty years. The author shows, in the most convincing manner, that the prodigious change from the former fatisfaction of the Germans on those subjects to their present discontent and attacks from every quarter, is neither a fair picture of the prevailing sentiments, nor has been the simple operation of things, but the result of a combination of trading Infidels.

I have here fomewhat anticipated, (for I hope to point out the fources of this combination,) because it helps to explain or illustrate the progress of infidelity and irreligion that I was fpeaking of. It was much accelerated by another circumstance. One Basedow, a man of talents and learning, fet up, in the Principality of Anhalt-Deffau, a PHILANTHROPINE, or academy of general education, on a plan extremely different from those of the Universities and Academies. By this appellation, the founder hoped to make parents expect that much attention would be paid to the morals of the pupils; and indeed the programs or advertifements by which Bafedow announced his inftitution to the public, defcribed it as the professed feminary of practical Ethics. Languages, fciences, and the ornamental exercifes, were here confidered as mere acceffories, and the great aim was to form the young mind to the love of mankind and of virtue, by a plan of moral education which was very specious and unexceptionable. But there was a circumstance which greatly obstructed the wide prospects of the founder. How were the religious opinions of the youth to be cared for ? Catholics, Lutherans, and Calvinifts, were almost equally numerous in the adjoining Principalities; and the exclusion of any two of these communions would prodigioufly limit the proposed usefulness of the inflitution. Basedow was a man of talents, a good scholar, and a perfuasive writer. He framed a fet of rules, by which the education should be conducted, and which, he thought, fhould make every parent eafy; and the plan is very judicious and manly. But none came but Lutherans. His zeal and intereft in the thing made him endeavour to intereft others; and he found this no hard matter. The people of condition, and all fenfible men, faw that it would be a very great advantage to the place, could they induce men to fend their children from all the neighbouring states. What we wish, we readily believe to be the truth; and Basedow's plan and reasonings appeared complete, and had the fupport of all classes of men. The moderate Calvinists, after some time, were not averse from them, and the literary manufacture of Germany was foon very bufy in making pamphlets, defending, improving, attacking, and reprobating the plans. Innumerable were the projects for moderating the differences between the three Christian communions of Germany, and making it possible for the members of them all, not only to live amicably among each other, and to worthip God in the fame church, but even to communicate together. This attempt naturally gave rife to much speculation and refinement; and the propofals for amendment of the formulas and the inftructions from the pulpit were profecuted with fo much keennefs, that the ground-work, Christianity, was refined and refined, till it vanished altogether, leaving Deifm, or Natural, or, as it was called, Philofophical Religion, in its place. I am not much mif-taken as to hiftorical fact, when I fay, that the aftonishing change in religious doctrine which has taken place in Protestant Germany within these last thirty years was chiefly occasioned by this scheme of Basedow's. The predifposing causes existed, indeed, and were were general and powerful, and the diforder had already broken out. But this fpecious and enticing object first gave a title to Protestant clergymen to put to their hand without rifk of being cenfured.

Basedow corrected, and corrected again, but not one Catholic came to the Philanthropine. He feems to have thought that the beft plan would be, to banish all positive religion whatever, and that he would then be fure of Catholic fcholars. Cardinal Dubois was fo far right with refpect to the first Catholic pupil of the church. He had recommended a man of his own ftamp to Louis XIV. to fill fome important office. The monarch was aftonished, and told the Cardinal, that "that would never do, for the man was a Janse-"nist; Eh! que non, Sire," faid the Cardinal, "il " n'est qu' Athée;" all was fafe, and the man got the priory. But though all was in vain, Bafedow's Philanthropine at Deflau got a high character. He published many volumes on education that have much merit.

It were well had this been all. But most unfortunately, though most naturally, writers of loofe moral principles and of wicked hearts were encouraged by the impunity which the fceptical writers experienced, and ventured to publish things of the vilest tendency, inflaming the paffions and justifying licentious manners. These maxims are congenial with irreligion and Atheifin, and the books found a quick market. It was chiefly in the Pruffian States that this went on. The late King was, to fay the beft of him, a naturalist, and, holding this life for his all, gave full liberty to his fubjects to write what they pleafed, provided they did not touch on state matters. He declared, however, to a minister of his court, long before his death, that " he " was extremely forry that his indifference had pro-" duced fuch effects; that he was fenfible it had greatly « contri-

" contributed to hurt the peace and mutual good treat-" ment of his fubjects;" and he faid, " that he would " willingly give up the glory of his best-fought battle, to have the fatisfaction of leaving his people in the fame state of peace and fatisfaction with their reli-" gious establishments, that he found them in at his accession to the throne." His successor Frederick William found that things had gone much too far, and determined to fupport the church-eftablishment in the most peremptory manner; but at the fame time to allow perfect freedom of thinking and conversing to the professors of every Christian faith, provided it was enjoyed without diffurbing the general peace, or any encroachment on the rights of those already supported by law. He published an edict to this effect, which is really a model worthy of imitation in every country. This was the epoch of a ftrange revolution. It was attacked from all hands, and criticifins, fatires, flan-ders, threatenings, poured in from every quarter. The independency of the neighbouring states, and the monarch's not being a great favourite among feveral of his neighbours, permitted the publication of those pieces in the adjoining principalities, and it was im-possible to prevent their circulation even in the Pruffian States. His edict was called an unjustifiable tyranny over the confciences of men; the dogmas fupported by it were termed absurd superstitions; the King's private character, and his opinions in religious matters, were treated with little reverence, nay, were ridiculed and scandalously abused. This field of difcuffion being thus thrown open, the writers did not confine themselves to religious matters. After flatly denying that the prince of any country had the finalleft right to prefcribe, or even direct the faith of his fubjects, they extended their discussions to the rights of princes in general; and now they fairly opened their trenches, trenches, and made an attack in form on the conftitutions of the German confederacy, and, after the ufual approaches, they fet up the ftandard of univerfal citizenship on the very ridge of the glacis, and summoned the fort to surrender. The most daring of these attacks was a collection of anonymous letters on the conftitutution of the Pruffian States. It was printed (or faid to be fo) at Utrecht; but by comparing the faults of fome types with fome books printed in Berlin, it was fuppofed by all to be the production of one of Nicholai's preffes. It was thought to be the composition of Mirabeau. It is certain that he wrote a French tranflation, with a preface and notes, more impudent than the work itfelf. The monarch is declared to be a tyrant; the people are addreffed as a parcel of tame wretches crouching under oppression. The people of Silefia are reprefented as still in a worfe condition, and are repeatedly called to roufe themfelves, and to rife up and affert their rights. The King is told, that there is a combination of philosophers (conjuration) who are leagued together in defence of truth and reafon, and which no power can withstand; that they are to be found in every country, and are connected by mutual and folemn engagement, and will put in practice every mean of attack. Enlightening, instruction, was the general cry among the writers. The triumph of reason over error, the overthrow of superstition and flavish fear, freedom from religious and political prejudices, and the eftablishment of liberty and equality, the natural and unalienable rights of man, were the topics of general declamation; and it was openly maintained, that fecret focieties, where the communication of fentiment should be free from every restraint, was the most effectual means for instructing and enlightening the world.

And

And thus it appears, that Germany has experienced the fame gradual progrefs, from Religion to Atheifm, from decency to diffolutenefs, and from loyalty to rebellion, which has had its courfe in France. And I must now add, that this progress has been effected in the fame manner, and by the fame means; and that one of the chief means of feduction has been the Lodges of the Free Masons. The French, along with their numerous chevalerics, and stars, and ribands, had brought in the cuftom of haranguing in the Lodges, and as human nature has a confiderable uniformity every where, the fame topics became favourite fubjects of declamation that had tickled the ear in France; there were the fame corruptions of fentiments and manners among the luxurious or profligate, and the fame incitements to the utterance of these fentiments, wherever it could be done with fafety; and I may fay, that the zealots in all these tracts of freethinking were more ferious, more grave, and fanatical. These are not affertions a priori. I can produce proofs. There was a Baron Knigge refiding at that time in the neighbourhood of Frankfort, of whom I shall afterwards have occasion frequently to speak. This man was an enthusiast in Masonry from his youth, and had run through every possible degree of it. He was disfatisfied with them all, and particularly with the frivolity of the French chivalry; but he still believed that Masonry contained invaluable fecrets. He imagined that he faw a glimfe of them in the cofmo-political and fceptical dif-courfes in their Lodges; he fat down to meditate on thefe, and foon collected his thoughts, and found that those French orators were right without knowing it; and that Masonry was pure natural religion and univerfal citizenship, and that this was also true Christianity. In this faith he immediately began his career of Brotherly love, and published three volumes of sermons ; the

the first and third published at Frankfort, and the fecond at Heidelberg, but without his name. He published also a popular system of religion. In all these publications, of which there are extracts in the Religions Begebenheiten, Christianity is confidered as a mere allegory, or a Masonic type of natural religion; the moral duties are spun into the common-place declamations of univerfal benevolence; and the attention is continually directed to the abfurdities and horrors of fuperstition, the fufferings of the poor, the tyranny and opprefion of the great, the tricks of the priefts, and the indolent fimplicity and patience of the laity and of the common people. The happiness of the patriarchal life, and fweets of univerfal equality and freedom, are the burden of every paragraph; and the general tenor of the whole is to make men difcontented with their condition of civil subordination, and the reftraints of revealed religion.

All the proceedings of Knigge in the Mafonic fchifms fhow that he was a zealous apoftle of cofmo politifm, and that he was continually dealing with people in the Lodges who were affectated with him in propagating those notions among the Brethren; fo that we are certain that fuch conversations were common in the German Lodges.

When the reader confiders all these circumstances, he will abate of that furprise which naturally affects a Briton, when he reads accounts of conventions for difcussion and fixing the dogmatic tenets of Free Mafonry. The perfect freedom, civil and religious, which we enjoy in this happy country, being familiar to every man, we indulge it with calmness and moderation, and fecret assemblies hardly differ from the common meetings of friends and neighbours. We do not forget the expediency of civil subordination, and of those diffications which arise from fecure possession of our rights, and the gradual accumulation of the comforts of life in the families of the fober and in-dustrious. These have, by prudence and a respectable œconomy, preferved the acquifitions of their anceftors. Every man feels in his own breaft the ftrong call of nature to procure for himfelf and his children, by every honeft and commendable exertion, the means of public confideration and respect. No man is fo totally without spirit, as not to think the better of his condition when he is come of creditable parents, and has creditable connections; and without thinking that he is in any refpect generous, he prefumes that others have the fame fentiments, and therefore allows the moderate expression of them, without thinking it infolence or haughtinefs. All these things are familiar, are not thought of, and we enjoy them as we enjoy ordinary health, without per-ceiving it. But in the fame manner as a young man who has been long confined by ficknefs, exults in returning health, and is apt to riot in the enjoyment of what he fo diffinctly feels; fo those who are under continual check in open society, feel this emancipation in those hidden affemblies, and indulge with eagernets in the expression of sentiments which in public they must smother within their own breast. Such meetings, therefore, have a zeft that is very alluring, and they are frequented with avidity. There is no country in Europe where this kird of enjoyment is fo poignant as in Germany. Very infignificant principa-lities have the fame rank in the General Federation with very extensive dominions. The internal conftitution of each petty flate being modelled in nearly the fame manner, the official honours of their little courts become ludicrous and even farcical. The Geheim Hofrath, the Hofmareschal, and all the Kammerhers of a Prince, whose dominions do not equal the eftates of

es E

of many English Squires, cause the whole to appear like the play of children, and must give frequent occasion for discontent and ridicule. Mason Lodges even keep this alive. The fraternal equality protessed in them is very flattering to those who have not succeeded in the foramble for civil distinctions. Such perfons become the most zealous Masons, and generally obtain the active offices in the Lodges, and have an opportunity of treating with authority perfons whom in public fociety they must look up to with some respect.

These confiderations account, in some measure, for the importance which Free Mafonry has acquired in Germany. For a long while the hopes of learning fome wonderful fecret made a German Baron think nothing of long and expensive journies in quest of some new degree. Of late, the cosmo-political doctrines encouraged and propagated in the Lodges, and fome hopes of producing a Revolution in fociety, by which men of talents fhould obtain the management of public affairs, feem to be the caufe of all the zeal with which the order is still cherished and promoted. In a periodical work, published at Neuwied, called Algemein Zeitung der Freymaurerey, we have the lift of the Lodges in 1782, with the names of the Office-bearers. Fourfifths of these are clergymen, professors, persons having offices in the common law-courts, men of letters by trade, fuch as reviewers and journalists, and other pamphleteers; a clafs of men, who generally think that they have not attained that rank in fociety to which their talents entitle them, and imagine that they could discharge the important offices of the flate with reputation to themselves and advantage to the public.

The miferable uncertainty and inftability of the Mafonic faith, which I defcribed above, was not altogether the effect of mere chance, but had been greatly accelerated by the machinations of Baron Knigge, and fome some other cosmo-political Brethren whom he had called to his assistance. Knigge had now formed a scheme for uniting the whole Fraternity, for the purpose of promoting his Utopian plan of universal bene-volence in a state of liberty and equality. He hoped to do this more readily by completing their embarraffment, and showing each system how infirm its foundation was, and how little chance it had of obtaining a general adherence. The Striften Observanz had now completely loft its credit, by which it had hoped to get the better of all the reft. Knigge therefore propoled a plan to the Lodges of Frankfort and Wetzlar, by which all the fyftems might, in some measure, be united, or at least be brought to a state of mutual forbearance and intercourfe. He proposed that the English system should be taken for the ground-work, and to receive all and only those who had taken the three fymbolical degrees, as they were now generally called. After thus guard-ing this general point of faith, he proposed to allow the validity of every degree or rank which should be received in any Lodge, or be made the character of any particular fystem. These Lodges having secured the adherence of feveral others, brought about a general convention at Willemsbad in Hainault, where every different fystem should communicate its peculiar tenets. It was then hoped, that after an examination of them all, a conftitution might be formed, which fhould comprehend every thing that was most worthy of felection, and therefore be far better than the accommodating fystem already described. By this he hoped to get his favourite scheme introduced into the whole Order, and Free Mafons made zealous Citizens of the World. I believe he was fincere in thefe intentions, and did not wifh to difturb the public peace. The convention was accordingly held, and lasted a long long while, the deputies confulting about the frivolities of Mafonry, with all the ferioufnels of flate ambaffadors. But there was great fhynefs in their communications; and Knigge was making but fmall progrefs in his plan, when he met with another Mafon, the Marquis of Conftanza, who in an inftant converted him, and changed all his meafures, by fhowing him that he (Knigge) was only doing by halves what was already accomplifhed by another Society, which had carried it to its full extent. They immediately fet about undoing what he had been occupied with, and heightened as much as they could the diffentions already fufficiently great, and, in the mean time, got the Lodges of Frankfort and Wetzlar, and feveral others, to unite, and pick out the beft of the things they had obtained by the communications from the other fyftems, and they formed a plan of what they called, the Eclectic or Syncritic Mafonry of the United Lodges of Germany. They compofed a conflitution, ritual, and catechifm, which has merit, and is indeed the completeft body of Free Mafonry that we have.

Such was the ftate of this celebrated and mysterious Fraternity in Germany in 1776. The spirit of innovation had feized all the Brethren. No man could give a tolerable account of the origin, history, or object of the Order, and it appeared to all as a lost or forgotten mystery. The symbols feemed to be equally sufceptible of every interpretation, and none of these feemed entitled to any decided preference.

CHAP. II.

The Illuminati.

I HAVE now arrived at what I fhould call the great epoch of Cofmo-politism, the scheme communicated to Baron Knigge by the Marchefe di Constanza. This obliges me to mention a remarkable Lodge of the Eclectic Masonry, erected at Munich in Bavaria in 1775, under the worshipful Master, Professor Baader. It was called The Lodge Theodore of Good Counfel. It had its conftitutional patent from the Royal York at Berlin, but had formed a particular fystem of its own, by instructions from the Loge des Chevaliers Bienfaisants at Lyons, with which it kept up a correspondence. This refpect to the Lodge at Lyons had arifen from the preponderance acquired in general by the French party in the convention at Willemsbad. The deputies of the Rofaic Lodges, as well as the remains of the Templars, and Striften Observanz, all looking up to this as the mother Lodge of what they called the Grand Orient de la France, confisting in (in 1782) of 266 improved Lodges united under the D. de Chartres. Accordingly the Lodge at Lyons fent Mr. Wilermooz as deputy to this convention at Willemsbad. Refining gradually on the fimple British Masonry, the Lodge had formed a fystem of practical morality, which it afferted to be the aim of genuine Mafoniy, faying, faying, that a true mafon, and a man of upright heart and active virtue, are fynonimous characters, and that the great aim of Free Mafonry is to promote the happinefs of mankind by every mean in our power. In purfuance of thefe principles, the Lodge Theodore profeffedly occupied itfelf with œconomical, ftatiftical, and political matters, and not only publifhed from time to time difcourfes on fuch fubjects by the Brother Orator, but the Members confidered themfelves as in duty bound to propagate and inculcate the fame doctrines out of doors.

Of the zealous members of the Lodge Theodore the most conspicuous was Dr. Adam Weishaupt, Pro-fessor of Canon Law in the University of Ingolstadt. This perfon had been educated among the Jefuits; but the abolition of their order made him change his views, and from being their pupil, he became their most bitter enemy. He had acquired a high reputa-tion in his profession, and was attended not only by tion in his profession, and was attended not only by those intended for the practice in the law-courts, but also by young gentlemen at large in their course of ge-neral education; and he brought numbers from the neighbouring states to this university, and gave a ton to the studies of the place. He embraced with great keenness this opportunity of spreading the favo-rite doctrines of the Lodge, and his auditory became the seminary of Cosmo-politism. The engaging pic-tures of the possible felicity of a society where every office is held by a man of talents and virtue, and where office is held by a man of talents and virtue, and where every talent is fet in a place fitted for its exertion, forcibly catches the generous and unfulpecting minds of youth, and in a Roman Catholic state, far advanced in the habits of grofs fuperstition (a character given to Bavaria by its neighbours) and abounding in monks and idle dignitaries, the opportunities must be frequent for observing the inconsiderate dominion of the clergy, and

and the abject and indolent fubmission of the laity. Accordingly Professor Weishaupt fays, in his Apology for Illuminatifm, that Deifm, Infidelity, and Atheifm are more prevalent in Bavaria than in any country he was acquainted with. Difcourfes, therefore, in which the abfurdity and horrors of fuperstition and spiritual tyranny were strongly painted, could not fail of making a deep impression. And during this state of the minds of the auditory the transition to general infidelity and irreligion is fo eafy, and fo invit-ing to fanguine youth, prompted perhaps by a latent with that the reftraints which religion imposes on the expectants of a future state might be found, on enquiry, to be nothing but groundless terrors, that I imagine it requires the most anxious care of the public teacher to keep the minds of his audience impressed with the reality and importance of the great truths of religion, while he frees them from the fhackles of blind and abfurd fuperstition. I fear that this celebrated instructor had none of this anxiety, but was fatisfied with his great fuccefs in the laft part of this tafk, the emancipa-tion of his young hearers from the terrors of fuperflition. I fuppofe also that this was the more agreeable to him, as it procured him the triumph over the Jefuits, with whom he had long ftruggled for the direction of the univerfity.

This was in 1777. Weifhaupt had long been fcheming the eftablifhment of an Affociation or Order, which, in time, fhould govern the world. In his firft fervour and high expectations, he hinted to feveral Ex-Jefuits the probability of their recovering, under a new name, the influence which they formerly poffeffed, and of being again of great fervice to fociety, by directing the education of youth of diffinction, now emancipated from all civil and religious prejudices. He prevailed on fome to join him, but they all retracted ted but two. After this difappointment Weifhaupt became the implacable enemy of the Jefuits; and his fanguine temper made him frequently lay himfelf open to their piercing eye, and drew on him their keeneft refentment, and at laft made him the victim of their enmity.

The Lodge Theodore was the place where the above-mentioned doctrines were most zealoufly propagated. But Weishaupt's emissaries had already procured the adherence of many other Lodges; and the Eclectic Mafonry had been brought into vogue chiefly by their exertions at the Willemsbad convention. The Lodge Theodore was perhaps less guarded in its proceedings, for it became remarkable for the very bold fentiments in politics and religion which were frequently uttered in their harangues; and its members were noted for their zeal in making profelytes. Many bitter pasquinades, satires, and other offensive pamphlets were in fecret circulation, and even larger works of very dangerous tendency, and feveral of them were traced to that Lodge. The Elector often expressed his difapprobation of fuch proceedings, and fent them kind meffages, defiring them to be careful not to difturb the peace of the country, and particularly to recollect the folemn declaration made to every entrant into the Fraternity of Free Masons, " That no subject " of religion or politics shall ever be touched on in " the Lodge;" a declaration which alone could have procured his permission of any fecret assembly whatever, and on the fincerity and honour of which he had reckoned when he gave his fanction to their eftablishment. But repeated accounts of the fame kind increafed the alarms, and the Elector ordered a judicial enquiry into the proceedings of the Lodge Theodore.

It was then diffeovered that this and feveral affociated. Lodges were the nurfery or preparation fehool for another Order of Masons, who called themselves the ILLUMINATED, and that the express aim of this Order was to abolish Christianity, and overturn all civil government. But the refult of the enquiry was very imperfect and unfatisfactory. No illuminati were to be found. They were unknown in the Lodge. Some of the members occasionally heard of certain candidates for illumination called MINERVALS, who were fometimes feen among them. But whether thefe had been admitted, or who received them, was known only to themfelves. Some of thefe were examined in private by the Elector himfelf. They faid that they were bound by honour to fecrecy: But they affured the Elector, on their honour, that the aim of the Order was in the higheft degree praise-worthy, and useful both to church and ftate. But this could not allay the anxiety of the profane public; and it was repeatedly stated to the Elector, that members of the Lodge Theodore had unguardedly fpoken of this Order as one that in time must rule the world. He therefore iffued an order forbidding, during his pleafure, all fecret affemblies, and fhutting up the Mafon Lodges. It was not meant to be rigoroufly enforced, but was intended as a trial of the deference of these Affociations for civil authority. The Lodge Theodore diftinguished itself by pointed opposition, continuing its meetings; and the members, out of doors, openly reprobated the prohibition as an abfurd and unjuftifiable tyranny.

In the beginning of 1783, four professors of the Marianen Academy, founded by the widow of the late Elector, viz. Utschneider, Cossandey, Renner, and Grunberger, with two others, were summoned before the Court of Enquiry, and questioned, on their allegiance, respecting the Order of the Illuminati. They acknowledged that they belonged to it, and when more more clotely examined, they related feveral circumstances of its constitution and principles. Their declarations were immediately published, and were very unfavourable. The Order was faid to abjure Christianity, and to refuse admission into the higher degrees to all who adhered to any of the three confessions. Senfual pleafures were reftored to the rank they held in the Epicurean philosophy, Self-murder was justified on Stoical principles. In the Lodges death was declared an eternal fleep; patriotifm and loyalty were called narrow-minded prejudices, and incompatible with univerfal benevolence; continual declamations were made on liberty and equality as the unalienable rights of man. The baneful influence of accumulated property was declared an infurmountable obstacle to the happiness of any nation whose chief laws were framed for its protection and increase. Nothing was fo frequently difcourfed of as the propriety of employing, for a good purpofe, the means which the wicked employed for evil purpoles; and it was taught, that the preponderancy of good in the ultimate refult confecrated every mean employed; and that wifdom and virtue confifted in properly determining this balance. This appeared big with danger, because it seemed evident that nothing would be ferupled at, if it could be made appear that the Order would derive advantage from it, because the great object of the Order was held as fuperior to every confideration. They concluded by faying that the method of education made them all fpies on each other and on all around them. But all this was denied by the Illuminati. Some of thefe tenets were faid to be absolutely false; and the reft were faid to be mistakes. The apostate professors had acknowledged their ignorance of many things. Two of them were only Minervals, another was an Illuminatus of the lowest class, and the fourth was but one step farther farther advanced. Pamphlets appeared on both fides, with very little effect. The Elector called before him one of the fuperiors, a young nobleman, who denied thofe injurious charges, and faid that they were ready to lay before his Highnefs their whole archives and all conftitutional papers.

Notwithstanding all this, the government had received fuch an impression of the dangerous tendency of the Order, that the Elector issued another edict, forbidding all hidden assemblies; and a third, expressly abolishing the Order of Illuminati. It was followed by a fearch after their papers. The Lodge Theodore was immediately fearched, but none were to be found. They faid now that they burnt them all, as of no use, fince that Order was at an end.

It was now difcovered, that Weifhaupt was the head and founder of the Order. He was deprived of his Profeffor's chair, and banifhed from the Bavarian States; but with a penfion of 800 florins, which he refufed. He went to Regenfburgh, on the confines of Switzerland. Two Italians, the Marquis Conftanza and Marquis Savioli, were alfo banifhed, with equal penfions, (about L. 40,) which they accepted. One Zwack, a counfellor, holding fome law-office, was alfo banifhed. Others were imprifoned for fome time. Weifhaupt went afterwards into the fervice of the D. of Saxe Gotha, a perfon of a romantic turn of mind, and whom we fhall again meet with. Zwack went into the fervice of the Pr. de Salms, who foon after had fo great a hand in the diffurfbances in Holland.

By deftroying the papers, all opportunity was loft for authenticating the innocence and ufefulnefs of the Order. After much altercation and paper war, Weifhaupt, now fafe in Regenfourg, published an account of the Order, namely, the account which was given to every Novice in a difcourfe read at his reception. To

To this were added the statutes and the rules of proceeding, as far as the degree of Illuminatus Minor, included. This account he affirmed to be conformable to the real practice of the Order. But this publication did by no means fatisfy the public mind. It differed exceedingly from the accounts given by the four pro-feffors. It made no mention of the higher degrees, which had been most blamed by them. Besides, it was alleged, that it was all a fiction, written in order to lull the fufpicions which had been raifed (and this . was found to be the cafe, except in refpect of the very lowest degree). The real constitution was brought to light by degrees, and shall be laid before the reader, in the order in which it was gradually difcovered, that we may the better judge of things not fully known by the conduct of the leaders during the detection. The first account given by Weishaupt is correct, as far as I shall make use of it, and shows clearly the methods that were taken to recommend the Order to ftrangers.

The Order of ILLUMINATI appears as an acceffory to Free Mafonry. It is in the Lodges of Free Mafons that the Minervals are found, and there they are prepared for Illumination. They muft have previoufly obtained the three Englifh degrees. The founder fays more. He fays that his doctrines are the only true Free Mafonry. He was the chief promoter of the Eclestic System. This heurged as the beft method for getting information of all the explanations which have been given of the Mafonic Mysteries. He was alfo a Strift Obfervanz, and an adept Rofycrucian. The refult of all his knowledge is worthy of particular remark, and shall therefore be given at large.

" I declare," fays he, " and I challenge all mankind to contradict my declaration, that no man can give give any account of the Order of Free Masonry, of " its origin, of its hiltory, of its object, nor any ex-" planation of its mysteries and fymbols, which does " not leave the mind in total uncertainty on all thefe points. Every man is entitled, therefore, to give 2.2 any explanation of the fymbols, and any fyltem of ٢٢ -" the doctrines, that he can render palatable. Hence " have fprung up that variety of fystems which for " twenty years have divided the Order. The fim-" ple tale of the English, and the fifty degrees of the French, and the Knights of Baron Hunde, are c C " equally authentic, and have equally had the fupport " of intelligent and zealous Brethren. These systems are in fact but one. They have all fprung from the 6.6 " Blue Lodge of Three degrees ; take thefe for their " ftandard, and found on these all the improvements " by which each fystem is afterwards fuited to the par-" ticular object which it keeps in view. There is no " man, nor fystem, in the world, which can show by undoubted fucceffion that it fhould ftand at the head 66 of the Order. Our ignorance in this particular frets ¢ C me. Do but confider our fhort hiftory of 120 years. ¢Č, -Who will flow me the Mother Lodge? Those 66 of London we have discovered to be felf-erected in 66 1716. Afk for their archives. They tell you they ¢¢. were burnt. They have nothing but the wretched c c fophiftications of the Englishman Anderson, and 55 the Frenchman Defaguiiliers. Where is the Lodge ٢٢. of York, which pretends to the priority, with their CC -King Bouden, and the archives that he brought from ٢٢ the East? These too are all burnt. What is the 55 " Chapter of Old Aberdeen, and its Holy Clericate ? " Did we not find it unknown, and the Mason Lodges s' there the most ignorant of all the ignorant, gaping for instruction from our deputies? Did we not find ¢C if the fame thing at London? and have not their " millionaries

" missionaries been among us, prying into our myste-" ries, and eager to learn from us what is true Free " Masonry? It is in vain, therefore, to appeal to " judges; they are no where to be found; all claim " for themselves the sceptre of the Order; all indeed " are on an equal footing. They obtained followers, " not from their authenticity, but from their condu-" civenefs to the end which they proposed, and from " the importance of that end. It is by this fcale that " we must measure the mad and wicked explanations " of the Rofycrucians, the Exorcifts, and Cabalifts. " These are rejected by all good Masons, because in-" compatible with social happiness. Only such systems " as promote this are retained. But alas, they are all fadly deficient, becaufe they leave us under the do-" minion of political and religious prejudices; and " they are as inefficient as the fleepy dole of an ordi-" nary fermon.

" But I have contrived an explanation which has " every advantage ; is inviting to Christians of every " communion ; gradually frees them from all religious " prejudices; cultivates the focial virtues; and ani-" mates them by a great, a feafible, and fpeedy profpect " of universal happiness, in a state of liberty and moral equality, freed from the obstacles which fubordi-CC. nation, rank, and riches, continually throw in our CC. way. My explanation is accurate, and complete, ٥٥ my means are effectual, and irrefiftible. Our fecret 6 C Affociation works in a way that nothing can with-CC. " frand, and man fall foce be free and happy.

" This is the great object held out by this Affocia-"tion, and the means of attaining it is Illumination, enlightening the underftanding by the fun of reafon, which will difpel the clouds of fuperflition and of prejudice. The proficients in this Order are therefore juftly named the Illuminated. And of all Illumina-"tion " tion which human reason can give, none is compara-" ble to the difcovery of what we are, our nature, our c c obligations, what happinefs we are capable of, and " what are the means of attaining it. In comparison with this, the most brilliant fciences are but amuse-¢¢ ments for the idle and luxurious. To fit man by ¢٢ Illumination for active virtue, to engage him to it .. by the strongest motives, to render the attainment 66 of it eafy and certain, by finding employment for c c every talent, and by placing every talent in its procc per fphere of action, fo that all, without feeling any cc 66 extraordinary effort, and in conjunction with and ¢¢ completion of ordinary bufinels, thall urge forward, with united powers, the general tafk. This indeed 60 çç will be an employment, fuited to noble natures, grand in its views, and delightful in its exercife. cc

" And what is this general object? THE HAPPINESS OF THE HUMAN RACE. Is it not diffreffing to a 66 generous mind, after comtemplating what human cc nature is capable of, to fee how little we enjoy? ٢6 66 When we look at this goodly world, and fee that every man may be happy, but that the happiness of ¢٢ one depends on the conduct of another; when we ¢٢ •• fee the wicked fo powerful and the good fo weak; and that it is in vain to ftrive fingly and alone, against cc the general current of vice and oppreffion : the with 60 naturally arifes in the mind, that it were poffible to 66 form a durable combination of the most worthy ¢¢ perfons, who fhould work together in removing the cc obftacles to human happinefs, become terrible to ¢ζ the wicked, and give their aid to all the good with-٢, out diffinction, and should, by the most powerful 66 means, first fetter, and by fettering, leffen vice; 64 means which at the fame time fhould promote virtue, 66 by rendering the inclination to rectitude hitherto fo cc feeble.

THE ILLUMINATI.

CHAP. II.

" feeble, more powerful and engaging. Would not fuch an affociation be a bleffing to the world?

" But where are the proper perfons, the good, the " generous, and the accomplifhed, to be found ; and " how, and by what ftrong motives, are they to be " induced to engage in a talk fo valt, fo inceffant, fo " difficult, and fo laborious ? This Affociation muft be gradual. There are fome fuch perfons to be 66 found in every fociety. Such noble minds will be c c engaged by the heart-warming object. The first task cc of the Affociation must therefore be to form the çç young members. As thefe multiply and advance, cc they become the apostles of beneficence, and the 55 work is now on foot, and advances with a fpeed en-•• creafing every day. The flighteft obfervation fhows ¢¢ that nothing will fo much contribute to increase the ٢, zeal of the members as fecret union. We fee with 66 what keennefs and zeal the frivolous bufinefs of 66 . 66 Free Mafonry is conducted, by perfons knit together by the fecrecy of their union. It is needlefs to ٢٢ enquire into the caufes of this zeal which fecrecy 60 produces. It is an universal fact, confirmed by the ¢¢ history of every age. Let this circumstance of our ¢¢, " conftitution therefore be directed to this noble purpofe, and then all the objections urged against it by cc jealous tyranny and affrighted fuperstition will vanish. ¢¢ The order will thus work filently, and fecurely; cc and though the generous benefactors of the human cc race are thus deprived of the applause of the world, ¢¢. they have the noble pleafure of feeing their work CC " prosper in their hands."

Such is the aim, and fuch are the hopes of the Order of the Illuminated. Let us now fee how thefe were to be accomplifhed. We cannot judge with perfect certainty of this, becaufe the account given of the conflitution of the Order by its founder includes only the M loweft degree, and even this is liable to great fufpicion. The accounts given by the four Professors, even of this part of the Order, make a very different impression on the mind, although they differ only in a few particulars.

The only oftenfible members of the Order were the Minervals. They were to be found only in the Lodges of Free Mafons. A candidate for admiffion muft make his wifh known to fome Minerval; he reports it to a Superior, who, by a channel to be explained prefently, intimates it to the Council. No notice is farther taken of it for fome time. The candidate is carefully obferved in filence, and if thought unfit for the Order, no notice is taken of his folicitation. But if otherwife, the candidate receives privately an invitation to a conference. Here he meets with a perfon unknown to him, and, previous to all further conference, he is required to perufe and to fign the following oath :

" I, N. N. hereby bind myfelf, by mine honour and good name, forfwearing all mental refervation, never to reveal, by hint, word, writing, or in any manner whatever, even to my moft trufted friend, any thing that fhall now be faid or done to me refpecting my wifhed-for reception, and this whether my reception fhall follow or not, I being previoufly affured that it fhall contain nothing contrary to religion, the ftate, nor good manners. I promife, that I fhall make no intelligible extract from any papers which fhall be fhewn me now or during my noviciate. All this I fwear, as I am, and as I hope to continue, a Man of Honour."

The urbanity of this proteftation must agreeably imprefs the mind of a perfon who recollects the dreadful imprecations which he made at his reception into the different ranks of Free Mafonry. The candidate is then introduced to an Illuminatus Dirigens, whom perhaps perhaps he knows, and is told that this perfon is to be his future instructor. There is now prefented to the candidate, what they call a table, in which he writes his name, place of birth, age, rank, place of refidence, profession, and favourite studies. He is then made to read feveral articles of this table. It contains, 1st, a very concife account of the Order, its connection with Free Masonry, and its great object; the promoting the happiness of mankind by means of instruction and confirmation in virtuous principles. 2d, Several questions relative to the Order. Among these are, "What advantages he hopes to derive from being a " member? What he most particularly wishes to " learn? What delicate questions relative to the life, " the profpects, the duties of man, as an individual, " and as a citizen, he wifhes to have particularly dif-" cuffed to him? In what refpects he thinks he can " be of use to the Order? Who are his ancestors, re-" lations, friends, correspondents, or enemies? Whom " he thinks proper perfons to be received into the " Order, or whom he thinks unfit for it, and the rea-" fons for both opinions ?" To each of these questions he must give fome answer in writing.

The Novice and his Mentor are known only to each other; perhaps nothing more follows upon this; if otherwife, the Mentor appoints another conference, and begins his inftructions, by giving him in detail certain portions of the conftitution, and of the fundamental rules of the Order. Of thefe the Novice muft give a weekly account in writing. He muft alfo read, in the Mentor's houfe, a book containing more of the inftructions of the Order; but he muft make no extracts. Yet from this reading he muft derive all his knowledge; and he muft give an account in writing of his progrefs. All writings received from his Superiors muft be returned with a flated punctuality.— Thefe Thefe writings confift chiefly of important and delicate queftions, fuited, either to the particular inclination, or to the peculiar tafte which the candidate had difcovered in his fubfcriptions of the articles of the table, and in his former referipts, or to the direction which a the Mentor wifnes to give to his thoughts.

Enlightening the underftanding, and the rooting out of prejudices, are pointed out to him as the principal tafks of his noviciate. The knowledge of himfelf is confidered as preparatory to all other knowledge. To difclose to him, by means of the calm and unbiaffed observation of his instructor, what is his own character, his most vulnerable fide, either in respect of temper, paffions, or preposseffions, is therefore the most effential fervice that can be done him. For this purpofe there is required of him fome account of his own conduct on occasions where he doubted of its propriety; fome account of his friendships, of his differences of opinion, and of his conduct on fuch occafions. From fuch relations the Superior learns his manner of thinking and judging, and those propensities which require his chief attention.

Having made the candidate acquainted with himfelf, he is apprifed that the Order is not a fpeculative, but an active affociation, engaged in doing good to others. The knowledge of human character is therefore of all others the moft important. This is acquired only by obfervation, affifted by the inftructions of his teacher. Characters in hiftory are proposed to him for observation, and his opinion is required. After this he is directed to look around him, and to notice the conduct of other men; and part of his weekly referipts must confist of accounts of all interesting occurrences in his neighbourhood, whether of a public or private nature. Coffandey, one of the four Professer, gives a particular account of the instructions relating to this kind of of science. " The Novice must be attentive to tri-" fles : For in frivolous occurrences a man is indolent, " and makes no effort to act a part, fo that his real " character is then acting alone. Nothing will have "fuch influence with the Superiors in promoting the " advancement of a candidate as very copious narra-" tions of this kind, because the candidate, if promo-" ted, is to be employed in an active station, and it " is from this kind of information only that the Supe-" riors can judge of his fitnefs. These characteristic " anecdotes are not for the inftruction of the Superi-" ors, who are men of long experience, and familiar with fuch occupation. But they inform the Order ¢ ¢ " concerning the talents and proficiency of the young " member. Scientific inftruction, being connected " by fystem, is foon communicated, and may in ge-" neral be very completely obtained from the books which are recommended to the Novice, and acqui-66 red in the public seminaries of instruction. ¢٢ But " knowledge of character is more multifarious and more delicate. For this there is no college, and it CC " must therefore require longer time for its attainment. " Befides, this affiduous and long continued ftudy of " men, enables the poffeffor of fuch knowledge to act " with men, and by his knowledge of their character, " to influence their conduct. For fuch reasons this " ftudy is continued, and thefe referipts are required, " during the whole progress through the Order, and " attention to them is recommended as the only mean " of advancement. Remarks on Phyfiognomy in " these narrations are accounted of confiderable va-" lue." So far Mr. Coffandey.

During all this trial, which may laft one, two, or three years, the Novice knows no perfon of the Order but his own inftructor, with whom he has frequent meetings, along with other Minervals. In these conyerfations versations he learns the importance of the Order, and the opportunities he will afterwards have of acquiring much hidden science. The employment of his unknown Superiors naturally caufes him to entertain very high notions of their abilities and worth. He is counfelled to aim at a refemblance to them by getting rid by degrees of all those prejudices or prepossessions which checked his own former progrefs; and he is af-fifted in this endeavour by an invitation to a correspondence with them. He may address his Provincial Superior, by directing his letter Soli, or the General by Primo, or the Superiors in general by Quibus licet. In these letters he may mention whatever he thinks conducive to the advancement of the Order; he may Inform the Superiors how his instructor behaves to him; if affiduous or remifs, indulgent or fevere. The Superiors are enjoined by the ftrongeft motives to convey thefe letters wherever addreffed. None but the General and Council know the refult of all this; and all are enjoined to keep themfelves and their proceedings unknown to all the world.

If three years of this Noviciate have elapfed without further notice, the Minerval must look for no further advancement; he is found unfit, and remains a Free Mason of the highest class. This is called a Sta bene.

But should his Superiors judge more favourably of him, he is drawn out of the general mass of Free Masons, and becomes Illuminatus Minor. When called to a conference for this purpose, he is told in the most ferious manner, that " it is vain for him to hope " to acquire wisdom by mere systematic instruction; " for fuch instruction the Superiors have no leifure. " Their duty is not to form speculators, but active " men, whom they must immediately employ in the " fervice of the Order. He must therefore grow wise " and

" and able entirely by the unfolding and exertion of " his own talents. His Superiors have already difco-" vered what thefe are, and know what fervice he may " be capable of rendering the Order, provided he " now heartily acquiesces in being thus honourably " employed. They will affift him in bringing his ta-" lents into action, and will place him in the fitua-" tions most favourable for their exertion, fo that he " may be affured of fuccess. Hitherto he has been a " mere scholar, but his first step farther carries him " into action; he must therefore now confider himself " as an inftrument in the hands of his Superiors, to " be used for the noblest purposes." The aim of the order is now more fully told him. It is, in one sentence, " to make of the human race, without any " diffinction of nation, condition, or profession, one good and happy family." To this aim, demonstrably attainable, every smaller confideration must give way. This may fometimes require facrifices which no man standing alone has fortitude to make; but which become light, and a fource of the purest enjoyment, when fupported and encouraged by the countenance and co-operation of the united wife and and good, fuch as are the Superiors of the Order. If the candidate, warmed by the alluring picture of the possible happiness of a virtuous Society, says that he is sensible of the propriety of this procedure, and still wishes to be of the Order, he is required to fign the following obligation.

" I, N. N. proteft before you, the worthy Plenipotentiary of the venerable Order into which I wifh to be admitted, that I acknowledge my natural weaknefs and inability, and that I, with all my poffeffions, rank, honours, and titles which I hold in political fociety, am, at bottom, only a man; I can enjoy thefe things only through my fellow-men, " and

" and through them alfo I may lofe them. The approbation and confideration of my fellow-men are " indifpenfably neceffary, and I mult try to maintain them by all my talents. Thefe I will never use to " the prejudice of universal good, but will oppose, " with all my might, the enemies of the human race, and of political fociety. I will embrace every op-" portunity of faving mankind, by improving my un-" derstanding and my affections, and by imparting all "important knowledge, as the good and statutes of this Order require of me. I bind myself to perpe-¢¢. tual filence and unshaken loyalty and submission to CC | the Order, in the perfons of my Superiors; here cc. making a faithful and complete furrender of my pri-CC. vate judgment, my own will, and every narrow-50 minded employment of my power and influence. I 26 pledge myfelf to account the good of the Order as 66 my own, and am ready to ferve it with my fortune, my honour, and my blood. Should I, through 50 65 omission, neglect, passion, or wicknedness, behave 66 contrary to this good of the Order, I : fubject mycc -" felf to what reproof or punishment my Superiors " shall enjoin. The friends and enemies of the Order shall be my friends and enemies; and with respect c (to both I will conduct mylelf as directed by the Orcc der, and am ready, in every lawful way, to devote ¢¢ myfelf to its increase and promotion, and therein to ¢¢ employ all my ability. All this I promife, and pro-٢C teft, without fecret refervation, according to the intention of the Society which require from me this ¢¢ cc engagement. This I do as I am, and as I hope to cc " continue, a Man of Honour."

A drawn fword is then pointed at his breaft, and he is afked, Will you be obedient to the commands of your Superiors? He is threatened with unavoidable vengeance, from which no potentate can defend him, if if he fhould ever betray the Order. He is then afked, 1. What aim does he wifh the Order to have? 2. What means he would choofe to advance this aim? 3. Whom he wifhes to keep out of the Order? 4. What fubjects he wifhes not to be difcuffed in it?

Our candidate is now ILLUMINATUS MINOR. It is needlefs to narrate the mummery of reception, and it is enough to fay, that it nearly refembles that of the Mafonic Chevalier du Soleil, known to every one much converfant in Mafonry. Weifhaupt's preparatory difcourfe of reception is a piece of good composition, whether confidered as argumentative, (from topics indeed, that are very gratuitous and fanciful,) or as a specimen of that declamation which was fo much practifed by Libanius and the other Sophifts, and it gives a diftinct and captivating account of the profession of the Order.

The Illuminatus Minor learns a good deal more of the Order, but by very fparing morfels, under the fame inftructor. The tafk has now become more delicate and difficult. The chief part of it is the rooting out of prejudices in politics and religion; and Weilhaupt has flown much addrefs in the method which he has employed. Not the most hurtful, but the most easily refuted were the first subjects of discussion, so that the pupil gets into the habits of victory; and his reverence for the fystems of either kind is diminished when they are found to have harboured fuch untenable opinions. The proceedings in the Eclectic Lodges of Mafonry, and the harangues of the Brother Orators, teemed with the boldest sentiments both in politics and religion. Enlightening, and the triumph of reafon, had been the ton of the country for fome time paft, and every inftitution, civil and religious, had been the fub-ject of the most free criticism. Above all, the Cosmopolitism, imported from France, where it had been N the the favourite topic of the enthusiastical conomists, was now become a general theme of difcuffion in all focieties that had any pretensions to cultivation. It was a fubject of eafy and agreeable declamation; and the Literati found in it a fubject admirably fitted for shewing their talents, and ingratiating themfelves with the young men of fortune, whole minds, unfufpicious as yet and generous, were fired with the fair profpects fet before them of univerfal and attainable happines. And the pupils of the Illuminati were ftill more warmed by the thought that they were to be the happy inftruments of accomplifying all this. And though the doctrines of univerfal liberty and equality, as imprefcriptible rights of man, might fometimes ftartle those who pofseffed the advantage of fortune, there were thousands of younger fons, and of men of talents without fortune, to whom these were agreeable sounds. And we must particularly observe, that those who were now the pupils were a fet of picked fubjects, whofe characters and peculiar biafes were well known by their conduct during their noviciate as Minervals. They were therefore fuch as, in all probability, would not boggle at very free fentiments. We might rather expect a partiality to doctrines which removed fome reftraints which formerly checked them in the indulgence of youthful paffions. Their instructors, who have thus relieved their minds from feveral anxious thoughts, must appear men of fuperior minds. This was a notion most carefully inculcated; and they could fee nothing to contradict it; for, except their own Mentor, they knew none; they heard of Superiors of different ranks, but never faw them; and the fame mode of inftruction that was practifed during their noviciate was still retained. More particulars of the Order were flowly unfolded to them, and they were taught that their Superiors were men of diftinguished talents, talents, and were Superiors for this reafon alone. They were taught, that the great opportunities which the Superiors had for obfervation, and their habits of continually occupying their thoughts with the great ob-jects of this Order, had enlarged their views, even far beyond the narrow limits of nations and kingdoms, which they hoped would one day coalefce into one great Society, where confideration would attach to talents and worth alone, and that pre-eminence in thefe would be invariably attended with all the enjoyments of influence and power. And they were told that they would gradually become acquainted with thefe great and venerable Characters, as they advanced in the Order. In earnest of this, they were made ac-quainted with one or two Superiors, and with several Illuminati of their own rank. Alfo, to whet their zeal, they are now made inftructors of one or two Minervals, and report their progrefs to their Superiors. They are given to understand that nothing can fo much recommend them as the fuecefs with which they perform this tafk. It is declared to be the best evidence of their usefulness in the great defigns of the Order.

The baleful effects of general fuperflition, and even of any peculiar religious prepoffetion, are now ftrongly inculcated, and the difcernment of the pupils in thefe matters is learned by queftions which are given them from time to time to difcufs. Thefe are managed with delicacy and circumfpection, that the timid may not be alarmed. In like manner, the political doctrines of the Order are inculcated with the utmoft caution. After the mind of the pupil has been warmed by the pictures of univerfal happinefs, and convinced that it is a poffible thing to unite all the inhabitants of the earth in one great fociety ; and after it has been made out, in fome measure to the fatisfaction of

of the pupil, that a great addition of happiness would be gained by the abolition of national diffinctions and animofities; it may frequently be no hard task to make him think that patriotifm is a narrow-minded monopolifing fentiment, and even incompatible with the more enlarged views of the Order; namely, the uniting the whole human race into one great and happy fociety. Princes are a chief feature of national diffinction. Princes, therefore, may now be fafely reprefented as unnecessary. If so, loyalty to Princes loses much of its facred character; and the fo frequent enforcing of it in our common political discussions may now be eafily made to appear a felfish maxim of rulers, by which they may more eafily enflave the people; and thus, it may at last appear, that religion, the love of our particular country, and loyalty to our Prince, should be refisted, if, by these partial or narrow views, we prevent the accomplishment of that Cosmo-political happinefs which is continually held forth as the great object of the Order. It is in this point of view that the terms of devotion to the Order, which are inferted in the oath of admission, are now explained. The authority of the ruling powers is therefore reprefented as of inferior moral weight to that of the Order. "Thefe " powers are defpots, when they do not conduct them-" felves by its principles; and it is therefore our duty " to furround them with its members, fo that the " profane may have no accefs to them. Thus we are " able most powerfully to promote its interests. If " any perfon is more difposed to listen to Princes " than to the Order, he is not fit for it, and must rife " no higher. We must do our utmost to procure the " advancement of Illuminati into all important civil " offices."

Accordingly the Order laboured in this with great zeal and fuccefs. A correspondence was discovered, in in which it is plain, that by their influence, one of the greateft ecclefiaftical dignities was filled up in oppofition to the right and authority of the Archbifhop of Spire, who is there reprefented as a tyrannical and bigoted prieft. They contrived to place their Members as tutors to the youth of diffinction. One of them, Baron Leuchtfenring, took the charge of a young prince without any falary. They infinuated themfelves into all public offices, and particularly into courts of juffice. In like manner, the chairs in the Univerfity of Ingolftadt were (with only two exceptions) occupied by Illuminati. "Rulers who are members mult be " promoted through the ranks of the Order only in " proportion as they acknowledge the goodnefs of its " great object, and manner of procedure. Its object " may be faid to be the checking the tyranny of " princes, nobles, and priefts, and eftablifhing an " univerfal equality of condition and of religion." The pupil is now informed, " that fuch a religion is " contained in the Order, is the perfection of Chrif-" tianity, and will be imparted to him in due time."

Thefe and will be imparted to him in due time." Thefe and other principles and maxims of the Order are partly communicated by the verbal inftruction of the Mentor, partly by writings, which muft be punctually returned, and partly read by the pupil at the Mentor's houfe, (but without taking extracts,) in fuch portions as he fhall direct. The referipts by the pupil muft contain difcuffions on thefe fubjects, and anecdotes and deferiptions of living characters; and thefe muft be zealoufly continued, as the chief mean of advancement. All this while the pupil knows only his Mentor, the Minervals, and a few others of his own rank. All mention of degrees, or other bufinefs of the Order, muft be carefully avoided, even in the meetings with other members: "For the Or-" der wifhes to be fecret, and to work in filence; for " thus it is better fecured from the opprefion of the " ruling powers, and becaufe this fecrecy gives a " greater zeft to the whole."

This fhort account of the Noviciate, and of the loweft clafs of illuminati, is all we can get from the authority of Mr. Weifhaupt. The higher degrees were not publifhed by him. Many circumftances appear fufpicious, are certainly fufceptible of different turns, and may eafily be pufhed to very dangerous extremes. The accounts given by the four profeffors confirm thefe fufpicions. They declare upon oath, that they make all thefe accufations in confequence of what they heard in the meetings, and of what they knew of the Higher Orders.

But fince the time of the fuppreffion by the Elector, discoveries have been made which throw great light on the fubject. A collection of original papers and correspondence was found by searching the house of one Zwack (a Member) in 1786. The following year a much larger collection was found at the house of Baron Batfus; and fince that time Baron Knigge, the most active Member next to Weishaupt, published an account of fome of the higher degrees, which had been formed by himfelf. A long while after this were published, Neueste Arbeitung des Spartacus und Philo in der Illuminaten Orden, and Hohere Graden des Illum. Ordens. These two works give an account of the whole fecret conftitution of the Order, its various degrees, the manner of conferring them, the inftructions to the intrants, and an explanation of the connection of the Order with Free Masonry, and a critical history. We shall give some extracts from such of these as have been published.

Weifhaupt was the founder in 1776. In 1778 the number of Members was confiderably increased, and the Order was fully established. The Members took antique antique names. Thus Weifhaupt took the name of Spartacus, the man who headed the infurrection of flaves, which in Pompey's time kept Rome in terror and uproar for three years. Zwack was called Cato. Knigge was Philo. Baffus was Hannibal. Hertel was Marius. Marquis Conftanza was Diomedes.— Nicolai, an eminent and learned bookfeller in Berlin, and author of feveral works of reputation, took the name of Lucian, the great fcoffer at all religion. Another was Mahomet, &c. It is remarkable, that except Cato and Socrates, we have not a name of any ancient who was eminent as a teacher and practifer of virtue. On the contrary, they feem to have affected the characters of the free-thinkers and turbulent fpirits of antiquity. In the fame manner they gave ancient names to the cities and countries of Europe. Munich was Athens, Vienna was Rome, &c.

Spartacus to Cato, Feb. 6, 1778.

" Mon but est de faire valoir la raison. As a subor-" dinate object I shall endeavour to gain security to " ourselves, a backing in case of missortunes, and as-" fiftance from without. I shall therefore press the " cultivation of science, especially such sciences as " may have an influence on our reception in the world, and may ferve to remove obstacles out of the way. ، "We have to ftruggle with pedantry, with intolerance, with divines and ftatefmen, and above all, ٥٥ princes and priefts are in our way. Men are unfit ٢C as they are, and must be formed; each class must CC. " be the school of trial for the next. This will be te-" dious, because it is hazardous. In the last classes I " propose academics under the direction of the Order. " This will fecure us the adherence of the Literati. « Science

" Science shall here be the lure. Only those who are " affuredly proper fubjects shall be picked out from " among the inferior claffes for the higher mysteries, which contain the first principles and means of pro-... " moting a happy life. No religionist must, on any account, be admitted into these: For here we work .. at the difcovery and extirpation of fuperstition and ¢¢. 60 prejudices. The inftructions shall be fo conducted that each shall disclose what he thinks he conceals ۲ within his own breaft, what are his ruling propenfi-¢¢. ties and passions, and how far he has advanced in 66 the command of himfelf. This will answer all the 60 purposes of auricular confession. And, in particu-٢٢ lar, every perfon shall be made a spy on another ٢C and on all around him. Nothing can efcape our ٢¢ fight; by thefe means we shall readily difcover who « « are contented, and receive with relish the peculiar c c ftate-doctrines and religious opinions that are laid 66 before them; and, at last, the trust-worthy alone CC . will be admitted to a participation of the whole ¢ C 66 maxims and political conftitution of the Order. In a council composed of fuch members we shall labour < C | at the contrivance of means to drive by degrees the cc " enemies of reafon and of humanity out of the world, and to establish a peculiar morality and religion fit-¢¢. ted for the great Society of Mankind. CC.

" But this is a ticklish project, and requires the utmost circumspection. The squeamish will start at the sight of religious or political novelties; and 60 cc they must be prepared for them. We must be par-66 ticularly careful about the books which we recom-C$ mend; I shall confine them at first to moralists and 50 reafoning historians. This will prepare for a patient ¢¢ reception, in the higher classes, of works of a bolder flight, fuch as Robinet's Systeme de la Nature-Poli-" 66 tique Naturelle-Philosophie de la Nature-Systeme So-" cial-

Say nothing on fuch fubjects to intrants, for cc we don't know how they will be received-folks are " not yet prepared. Marius, an excellent man, must " be dealt with. His stomach, which cannot yet di-66 gest such strong food, must acquire a better tone. C C The allegory on which I am to found the mysteries 56 of the Higher Orders is the fire-worship of the Magi. cc We must have fome worship, and none is so apposite. C C 66 LET THERE BE LIGHT, AND THERE SHALL BE c c LIGHT. This is my motto, and is my fundamental principle. The degrees will be Feuer Orden, Parfen cc Orden* ; all very practicable. In the courfe through 66 these there will be no STA BENE (this is the answer 66 given to one who folicits preferment, and is refused). ٢٢ For I engage that none shall enter this class who has C C not laid aside his prejudices. No man is fit for our 66 Order who is not a Brutus or a Catiline, and is not ٢C ready to go every length .- Tell me how you like c c " this ?"

Spartacus to Cate, March 1778.

"To collect unpublished works, and information from the archives of States, will be a most useful fervice. We shall be able to show in a very ridiculouslight the claims of our despots. Marius (keeper of the archives of the Electorate) has ferreted out a noble document, which we have got. He makes it, for footh, a case of conficience—how filly that—fince

" only

"only that is fin which is ultimately productive of mifchief. In this cafe, where the advantage far exceeds the hurt, it is meritorious virtue. It will do more good in our hands than by remaining for 1000 years on the dufty fhelf."

There was found in the band-writing of Zwack a project for a Sifterhood, in fubferviency to the defigns of the Illuminati. In it are the following paffages :

" It will be of great fervice, and procure us both much information and money, and will fuit charmingly the tafte of many of our trueft members, who are lovers of the fex. It fhould confift of two claffes, the virtuous and the freer hearted (i. e. thofe who fly out of the common track of prudifh manners); they muft not know of each other, and muft be under the direction of men, but without knowing it. Proper books muft be put into their hands, and fuch (but fecretly) as are flattering to their paffions."

There are, in the fame hand-writing, Defcription of a ftrong box, which, if forced open, shall blow up and deftroy its contents-Several receipts for procuring abortion-A composition which blinds or kills when fpurted in the face-A fheet, containing a receipt for fympathetic ink-Tea for procuring abortion-Herbæ quae habent qualitatem deleteream-A method for filling a bed-chamber with peftilential vapours-How to take off impressions of feals, so as to use them afterwards as feals-A collection of fome hundreds of tuch imprettions, with a lift of their owners, princes, nobles, clergymen, merchants, &c .-- A receipt ad excitandum furorem uterinum,-Amanufcript intitled, " Better than Horus." It was afterwards printed and diffributed at Leipzig fair, and is an attack and bitter fatire on all religion. This is in the hand-writing of Ajax. As alfo a differtation on fuicide .- N.B. His fifter-in-law threw herfelf from the top of a tower. There was also a fet of portraits, portraits, or characters of eighty-five ladies in Munich; with recommendations of fome of them for members of a Lodge of Sifter Illuminatæ; alfo injunctions to all the Superiors to learn to write with both hands; and that they fhould use more than one cypher.

Immediately after the publication of these writings, many defences appeared. It was faid that the dreadful medical apparatus were with propriety in the hands of Counfellor Zwack, who was a judge of a criminal court, and whofe duty it was therefore to know fuch things. The fame excufe was offered for the collection of feals; but how came thefe things to be put up with papers of the Illuminati, and to be in the handwriting of one of that Order? Weifhaupt fays, " Thefe " things were not carried into effect-only fpoken of, " and are justifiable when taken in proper connec-" tion." This however he has not pointed out; but he appeals to the account of the Order, which he had published at Regensburg, and in which neither these things are to be found, nor any poffibility of a connection by which they may be justified. " All men," fays he, " are fubject to errors, and the best man is he " who beft conceals them. I have never been guilty of any fuch vices or follies : for proof, I appeal to < C | " the whole tenor of my life, which my reputation, " and my ftruggles with hostile cabals, had brought " completely into public view long before the inftitu-" tion of this Order, without abating any thing of that " flattering regard which was paid to me by the first " perfons of my country and its neighbourhood; a re-" gard well evinced by their confidence in me as the " best instructor of their children." In some of his private letters, we learn the means which he employed to acquire this influence among the youth, and they are fuch as could not fail. But we must not anticipate. " It is well known that I have made the chair which I " occupied

" occupied in the univerfity of Ingolftadt, the refort " of the first class of the German youth; whereas formerly it had only brought round it the low-born C C " practitioners in the courts of law. I have gone " through the whole circle of human enquiry. I have " exorciled fpirits-raifed ghofts-difcovered trea-" fures-interrogated the Cabala-batte Loto gespielt-I " have never transmuted metals."-(A very pretty and refpectable circle indeed, and what vulgar fpirits would fcarcely have included within the pale of their curiofity.)—" The Tenor of my life has been the op-" pofite of every thing that is vile; and no man can " lay any fuch thing to my charge. I have reafon to " rejoice that thefe writings have appeared; they are a " vindication of the Order and of my conduct. I can and must declare to God, and I do it now in the c C " most folemn manner, that in my whole life I never " faw or heard of the fo much condemned fecret wri-" tings; and in particular, respecting these abomina-" ble means, fuch as poifoning, abortion, &c. was it " ever known to me in any cafe, that any of my friends " or acquaintances ever even thought of them, advifed them, or made any use of them. I was indeed CC. always a schemer and projector, but never could en-66 gage much in detail. My general plan is good, 66 though in the detail there may be faults. I had my-٢C felf to form. In another fituation, and in an active ¢¢. " ftation in life, I fhould have been keenly occupied, ¢¢. and the founding an Order would never have come into my head. But I would have executed much e C . " greater things, had not government always oppofed " my exertions, and placed others in the fituations çc. which fuited my talents. It was the full conviction of this and of what could be done, if every man were ٢٢ " placed in the office for which he was fitted by nature " and a proper education, which first suggested to me " the

" the plan of Illumination." Surely Mr. Weifhaupt had a very ferious charge, the education of youth; and his encouragement in that charge was the moft flattering that an Illuminatus could wifh for; becaufe he had brought round him the youth whofe influence in fociety was the greateft, and who would moft of all contribute to the diffufing good principles, and exciting to good conduct through the whole flate. " I did not," fays he, " bring deifm into Bavaria more than into " Rome. I found it here, in great vigour, more a-" bounding than in any of the neighbouring Proteftant " flates. I am proud to be known to the world as " the founder of the Order of Illuminati; and I repeat " my wifh to have for my epitaph,

"Hic fitus est Phathen, currús auriga paterni, "Quem si non tenuit, magnis tamen excidit ausis."

The fecond difcovery of fecret correspondence at Sandersdorff, the seat of Baron Batz, (Hannibal,) contains still more interesting facts.

Spartacus to Cato.

"What fhall I do? I am deprived of all help. Socrates, who would infift on being a man of confequence among us, and is really a man of talents, and of a right way of thinking, is eternally befotted. Auguftus is in the worft effimation imaginable. Alcibiades fits the day long with the vintner's pretty wife, and there he fighs and pines. A few days ago, at Corinth, Tiberius attempted to ravifh the wife of Democides, and her hufband came in upon them. Good heavens! what Areopagitae I have got. When the worthy man Marcus Aurelius comes to Athens, (Munich,) what will he think? What a "meeting

" meeting of diffolute, immoral wretches, whoremaf-" ters, liars, bankrupts, braggarts, and vain fools! "When he fees all this, what will he think ? He will " be ashamed to enter into an Association," (observe Reader, that Spartacus writes this in August 1783, in the very time that he would have murdered Cato's fifter, as we fhall fee,) " where the chiefs raife the " higheft expectations, and exhibit fuch wretched ex-" amples; and all this from felf-will, from fenfuality. " Am I not in the right-that this man-that any " fuch worthy man-whofe name alone would give us " the felection of all Germany, will declare that the " whole province of Grecia, (Bavaria,) innocent and " guilty, must be excluded. I tell you, we may stu-" dy, and write, and toil till death. We may facri-" fice to the Order, our health, our fortune, and our " reputation, (alas, the lofs!) and thefe Lords, fol-" lowing their own pleafures, will whore, cheat, fteal, " and drive on like shameless rascals; and yet must " be Areopagita, and interfere in every thing. In-" deed, my dearest friend, we have only enflaved " ourselves."

In another part of this fine correspondence, Diomedes has had the good fortune to intercept a Q. L. (Quibus Licet,) in which it is faid, and supported by proofs, that Cato had received 250 florins as a bribe for his fentence in his capacity of a judge in a criminal court (the end had surely fanctified the means.) In another, a Minerval complains of his Mentor for having by lies occasioned the difinision of a physician from a family, by which the Mentor obtained, in the fame capacity, the custom of the house and free access, which favour he repaid by debauching the wise; and he prays to be informed whether he may not get another Mentor, faying that although that man had always given him the most excellent instructions, and he doubted doubted not would continue them, yet he felt a difguft at the hypocrify, which would certainly diminish the impreffion of the most falutary truths. (Is it not diftreffing to think, that this promifing youth will by and by laugh at his former fimplicity, and follow the fleps and not the inftructions of his phyfician.) In another place, Spartacus writes to Marius, (in confidence,) that another worthy Brother, an Areopagita, had stolen a gold and a filver watch, and a ring, from Brutus, (Savieli,) and begs Marius, in another letter, to try, while it was yet possible, to get the things reftored, becaufe the culprit was a most excellent man, (Vortrefflich,) and of vast use to the Order, having the direction of an eminent feminary of young gentlemen; and because Savioli was much in good company, and did not much care for the Order, except in fo far as it gave him an opportunity of knowing and leading fome of them, and of fteering his way at court.

I cannot help inferting here, though not the most proper place, a part of a provincial report from Knigge, the man of the whole Aeropagitæ who shows any thoug like urbanity or gentleness of mind.

" Of my whole colony, (Weftphalia,) the most bril-Iiant is Claudiopolis (Neuwied). There they work, and direct, and do wonders."

If there ever was a fpot upon earth where men may be happy in a ftate of cultivated fociety, it was the little principality of Neuwied. I faw it in 1770. The town was neat, and the palace handfome and in good tafte. But the country was beyond conception delightful; not a cottage that was out of repair, not a hedge out of order; it had been the hobby (pardon me the word) of the Prince, who made it his daily employment to go through his principality regularly, and affilt every houfholder, of whatever condition, with his advice, and and with his purfe; and, when a freeholder could not of himfelf put things into a thriving condition, the Prince fent his workmen and did it for him. He endowed fchools for the common people, and two academies for the gentry and the people of bufinefs. He gave little portions to the daughters, and prizes to the well-behaving fons of the labouring people. His own houshold was a pattern of elegance and economy; his fons were fent to Paris to learn elegance, and to England to learn science and agriculture. In short, the whole was like a romance (and was indeed romantic). I heard it fpoken of with a finile at the table of the Bishop of Treves, at Ehrenbretstein, and was induced to fee it next day as a curiofity: And yet even here, the fanaticism of Knigge would distribute his poifon, and tell the blinded people, that they were in a flate of fin and mifery, that their Prince was a defpot, and that they would never be happy till he was made to fly, and till they were all made equal.

They got their wifh; the fwarm of French locufts fat down on Neuwied's beautiful fields in 1793, and entrenched themfelves; and in three months, Prince and farmers houfes, and cottages, and fchools, and academies—all had vanifhed; and all the fubjects were made equal. But when they complained to the French General (René le Grand) of being plundered by his foldiers, he anfwered, with a contemptuous and cutting laugh, "All is ours—we have left you your eyes " to cry."—(Report to the Convention, 13th June 1795.)

CHAP. II.

To proceed:

Spartacus to Cato.

" By this plan we shall direct all mankind. In this " manner, and by the fimplest means, we shall set all " in motion and in flames. The occupations must be " fo allotted and contrived, that we may, in fecret, " influence all political transactions." N. B. This alludes to a part that is with-held from the public, becaufe it contained the allotment of the most rebellious and profligate occupations to feveral perfons whofe common names could not be traced. " I have confi-" dered," fays Spartacus, " every thing, and fo pre-" pared it, that if the Order should this day go to ruin, ^{cc} I shall in a year re-establish it more brilliant than " ever." Accordingly it got up again in about this fpace of time, under the name of the GERMAN UNION, appearing in the form of READING SOCIETIES. One of thefe was fet up in Zwack's house; and this raising a sufpicion, a visitation was made at Landshut, and the first let of the private papers were found. The scheme was, however, zealoufly profecuted in other parts of Germany, as we fhall fee by and by. " Nor," continues Spartacus, " will it fignify though all fhould be " betrayed and printed. I am fo certain of fuccefs, in " spite of all obitacles, (for the springs are in every " heart,) that I am indifferent, though it should involve inv life and my liberty. What! have thousands 00 " thrown away their lives about bomoios and bomoioufies " and shall not this cause warm even the heart of a " coward? But I have the art to draw advantage even " from misfortune; and when you would think me " funk to the bottom, I shall rife with new vigour. "Who would have thought, that a professor at Ingol-P " fradr

THE ILLUMINATI.

" ftadt was to become the teacher of the professor of Gottingen, and of the greatest men in Germany?",

Spartacus to Cato.

"Send me back my degree of Illuminatus Minor; it is the wonder of all men here (I may perhaps find time to give a translation of the difcourfe of reception, which contains all that can be faid of this Affociation to the public); as alfo the two laft sheets of my degree, which is in the keeping of Marius, and Celfus, under 100 locks, which contains my history of the lives of the Patriarchs." N. B. Nothing very particular has been difcovered of thefe lives of the Patriarchs. He fays, that there were above fixty sheets of it. To judge by the care taken of it, it must be a favourite work, very hazardous, and very eatching.

In another letter to Cato, we have fome hints of the higher degrees, and concerning a peculiar morality, and a popular religion, which the Order was one day to give the world. He fays, "There muft (a la Je-"fuite) not a fingle purpofe ever come in fight that is " ambiguous, and that may betray our aims againft " religion and the ftate. One muft fpeak fometimes " one way and fometimes another, but fo as never to " contradict ourfelves, and fo that, with refpect to " our true way of thinking, we may be impenetrable. " When our ftrongeft things chance to give offence, " they muft be explained as attempts to draw anfwers " which difcover to us the fentiments of the perfon " we converfe with." N. B. This did not always fucceed with him.

Spartacus fays, fpeaking of the priefts degree, "One "would almoft imagine, that this degree, as I have ma-"naged

" naged it, is genuine Christianity, and that its end " was to free the Jews from flavery. I fay, that Free " Masonry is concealed Christianity. My explanation " of the hieroglyphics, at leaft, proceeds on this fup-polition; and as I explain things, no man need be alhamed of being a Christian. Indeed I afterwards throw away this name, and fubstitute Reason. But CC. I affure you this is no small affair; a new religion, 23 " and a new ftate-government, which fo happily ex-" plain one and all of thefe fymbols, and combine " them in one degree. You may think that this is " my chief work; but I have three other degrees, " all different, for my clafs of higher myfteries, in " comparison with which this is but child's play; but " these I keep for myself as General, to be bestowed " by me only on the Benemeritissimi," (furely fuch as Cato, his dearest friend, and the possessor of fuch pretty fecrets, as abortives, poifons, peftilential vapours, &c.). "The promoted may be Areopagites or not. "Were you here I fhould give you this degree with-" out hefitation. But it is too important to be intruf-" ted to paper, or to be beftowed otherwife than from " my own hand. It is the key to hiftory, to religion, " and to every flate-government in the world."*

"Spartacus proceeds, "There shall be but three copies for all Germany. You can't imagine what respect and curiosity my priest-degree has raised; and, which is wonderful, a famous Protestant divine, who is now of the Order, is perfuaded that the

* I observe, in other parts of his correspondence where he speaks of this, several singular phrases, which are to be found in two books; Antiqueté devoilée par ses Usages, and Origine du Despotisme Oriental. These contain indeed much of the maxims inculcated in the reception discourse of the degree Illumanitus Minor. Indeed I have found, that Weishaupt is much less an inventor than he is generally thought.

THE ILLUMINATI.

" the religion contained in it is the true fenfe of Chriftianity. O MAN, MAN! TO WHAT MAY'ST THOU NOT BE PERSUADED. Who would imagine that I was to be the founder of a new religion?"

In this fcheme of Majonic Christianity, Spartacus and Philo laboured feriously together. Spartacus fent him the materials, and Philo worked them up. It will therefore illustrate this capital point of the constitution of the Order, if we take Philo's account of it.

Philo to Cato.

" We must confider the ruling propensities of every " age of the world. At prefent the cheats and tricks " of the priefts have roufed all men against them, and " against Christianity. But, at the fame time, super-" ftition and fanaticifm rule with unlimited dominion, " and the underftanding of man really feems to be going backwards. Our tafk, therefore, is doubled. 65 "We must give such an account of things, that fana-" tics should not be alarmed, and that shall, notwith-" ftanding, excite a spirit of free enquiry. We must " not throw away the good with the bad, the child with the dirty water; but we must make the fecret 66 " doctrines of Christianity be received as the fecrets of genuine Free Masonry. But farther, we have to ¢¢. deal with the defpotism of Princes. This increases c C " every day. But then, the fpirit of freedom breathes " and fighs in every corner; and, by the affiftance of " hidden schools of wisdom, Liberty and Equality, " the natural and impreferiptible rights of man, warm and glow in every breast. We must therefore unite ¢¢. these extremes. We proceed in this manner. 65

" Jefus Chrift eftablifhed no new Religion; he would only fet Religion and Reafon in their ancient " rights.

" rights. For this purpose he would unite men in a " common bond. He would fit them for this by " fpreading a just morality, by enlightening the underftanding, and by affifting the mind to thake off ¢¢ – all prejudices. He would teach all men, in the first •• " place, to govern themfelves. Rulers would then be needlefs, and equality and liberty would take CC. place without any revolution, by the natural and ¢ ¢ gentle operation of reafon and expediency. This c c great Teacher allows himfelf to explain every part ¢ ¢ of the Bible in conformity to these purposes; and cc he forbids all wrangling among his scholars, because ¢¢, every man may there find a reafonable application CC. " to his peculiar doctrines. Let this be true or falle, it does not fignify. This was a fimple Religion, and " it was fo far infpired; but the minds of his hearers " were not fitted for receiving these doctrines. I told " you, fays he, but you could not bear it. Many " therefore were called, but few were chosen. To " this elect were entrusted the most important fecrets; c c and even among them there were degrees of information. There was a feventy, and a twelve. All ¢¢. " this was in the natural order of things, and accord-" ing to the habits of the Jews, and indeed of all an-tiquity. The Jewish Theosophy was a mystery; " like the Eleufinian, or the Pythagorean, unfit for " the vulgar. And thus the doctrines of Christianity " were committed to the Adepti, in a Disciplina Arcani. " By thefe they were maintained like the Veftal Fire .----" They were kept up only in hidden focieties, who " handed them down to posterity; and they are now " poffested by the genuine Free Matons."

N. B. This explains the origin of many anonymous pamphlets which appeared about this time in Germany, fhowing that Free Mafonry was Christianity .---They have doubtlefs been the works of Spartacus and his his partifans among the Eclectic Mafons. Nicholai, the great apoftle of infidelity, had given very favour-able reviews of thefe performances, and having always fhewn himfelf an advocate of fuch writers as depreciated Christianity, it was natural for him to take this opportunity of bringing it still lower in the opinion of the people. Spartacus therefore conceived a high opi-nion of the importance of gaining Nicholai to the Or-der. He had before this gained Leuchtfenring, a hotheaded fanatic, who had spied Jesuits in every corner, and fet Nicholai on his journey through Germany, to hunt them out. This man finding them equally hated by the Illuminati, was eafily gained, and was most zealous in their cause. He engaged Nicholai, and Spartacus exults exceedingly in the acquisition, faying, "that he was an unwearied champion, et quidem conten-" tissimus." Of this man Philo fays, "that he had fpread this Christianity into every corner of Ger-" many. I have put meaning," fays Philo, " to all " thefe dark fymbols, and have prepared both de-" grees, introducing beautiful ceremonies, which I " have felected from among those of the ancient com-" munions, combined with those of the Rofaic Ma-" fonry; and now," fays he, " it will appear that we " are the only true Christians. We shall now be in a " condition to fay a few words to Priefts and Princes. " I have fo contrived things, that I would admit even " Popes and Kings, after the trials which I have pre-Popes and Kings, after the trials which I have pre" fixed; and they would be glad to be of the Order." But how is all this to be reconciled with the plan of Illumination, which is to banifh Chriftianity altogether? Philo himfelf in many places fays, " that it is " only a cloak, to prevent fqueamifh people from

" ftarting back." This is done pretty much in the fame way that was practified in the French Mafonry. In one of their Rituals the Mafter's degree is made typical typical of the death of Jefus Chrift, the preacher of Brotherly love. But, in the next ftep, the Chevalier du Soleil, it is Reafon that has been deftroyed and entombed, and the Mafter in this degree, the Sublime Philofophe, occasions the difcovery of the place where the body is hid; Reafon rifes again, and superstition and tyranny disappear, and all becomes clear; man becomes free and happy.

Let us hear Spartacus again.

Spartacus, in another place.

"We must, if, gradually explain away all our pre-" paratory pious frauds. And when perfons of difcern-" ment find fault, we must defire them to confider the " end of all our labour. This fanctifies our means, " which at any rate are harmlefs, and have been ufe-" ful, even in this cafe, because they procured us a " patient hearing, when otherwife men would have " turned away from us like petted children. This " will convince them of our fentiments in all the in-" tervening points; and our ambiguous expressions " will then be interpreted into an endeavour to draw answers of any kind, which may show us the minds ٢٢. of our pupils. 2d, We must unfold, from history and other writings, the origin and fabrication of all ٢٢. ٢٢. religious lies whatever; and then, 3d, We give a ۵۵. •• critical history of the Order. But I cannot-but " laugh, when I think of the ready reception which " all this has met with from the grave and learned di-" vines of Germany and of England; and I wonder " how their William failed when he attempted to efta-" blifh a Deiftical Worfhip in London, (what can this " mean?) for, I am certain, that it must have been " most acceptable to that learned and free people. But " they

" they had not the enlightening of our days." I may here remark, that Weishaupt is prefuming too much on the ignorance of his friend, for there was a great deal of this enlightening in England at the time he speaks of, and if I am not mistaken, even this celebrated Profeffor of Irreligion has borrowed most of his scheme from this kingdom. This to be fure is nothing in our praise. But the PANTHEISTICON of Toland refembles Weishaupt's Illumination in every thing but its rebellion and its villainy. Toland's Socratic Lodge is an elegant pattern for Weißbaupt, and his Triumph of Reason, his Philosophic Happiness, his God, or Anima Mundi, are all fo like the harfh fystem of Spartacus, that I am convinced that he has copied them, ftamping them with the roughnels of his own character. But to go on; Spartacus fays of the English: " Their poet Pope made his Effay on Man a fystem " of pure naturalism, without knowing it, as Brother " Chryfippus did with my Prieft's Degree, and was " equally aftonished when this was pointed out to him. " Chryfippus is religious, but not fuperstitious. Bro-" ther Lucian (Nicolai, of whom I have already faid " fo much) fays, that the grave Zolikofer now allows " that it would be a very proper thing to eftablish a " Deiftical Worship at Berlin. I am not afraid but things will go on very well. But Philo, who was entrusced with framing the Priest's Degree, has de-¢¢, Rroyed it without any neceffity; it would, forfooth, cc " ftartle those who have a hankering for Religion. But " I always told you that Philo is fanatical and prudifh. " I gave him fine materials, and he has fuffed it full 4 C of ceremonies and child's play, and as Minos fays, " c'est jouer la religion. But all this may be corrected " in the revision by the Areopagita."

N. B. I have already mentioned Baron Knigge's convertion to Illuminatifm by the M. de Co.flanza, whofe whofe name in the Order was Diomedes. Knigge (henceforth Philo) was, next to Spartacus, the most ferviceable man in the Order, and procured the greateft number of members. It was chiefly by his exer-tions among the Masons in the Protestant countries, that the EcleEtic System was introduced, and afterwards brought under the direction of the Illuminati. This conqueft was owing entirely to his very extensive con-nections among the Masons. He travelled like a phi-losopher from city to city, from Lodge to Lodge, and even from house to house, before his Illumination, trying to unite the Masons, and he now went over the fame ground to extend the EcleEtic System, and to get the Lodges put under the direction of the Illuminati, by their choice of the Master and Wardens. By this the Order had an opportunity of noticing the conduct of individuals; and when they had found out their manner of thinking, and that they were fit for their manner of thinking, and that they were fit for their purpofe, they never quitted them till they had gained them over to their party. We have feen, that he was by no means void of religious impressions, and we of-ten find him offended with the atheism of Spartacus. Knigge was at the fame time a man of the world, and had kept good company. Weishaupt had passed his life in the habits of a college: therefore he knew Knigge's value, and communicated to him all his pro-iests to be dreffed up by him for the tafte of fosiety. jects, to be dreffed up by him for the tafte of fociety. Philo was of a much more affectionate difpolition, with fomething of a devotional turn, and was shocked at the hard indifference of Spartacus. After labouring four years with great zeal, he was provoked with the difingenuous tricks of Spartacus, and he broke off all connection with the Society in 1784, and fome time after published a declaration of all that he had done in it. This is a most excellent account of the plan and principles of the Order, (at least as he conceived it, Ofor for Spartacus had much deeper views,) and fhows that the aim of it was to abolifh Chriftianity, and all the ftate-governments in Europe, and to eftablifh a great republic. But it is full of romantic notions and enthufiaftic declamation, on the hackneyed topics of univerfal citizenfhip, and liberty and equality. Spartacus gave him line, and allowed him to work on, knowing that he could difcard him when he chofe. I fhall after this give fome extracts from Philo's letters, from which the reader will fee the vile behaviour of Spartacus, and the nature of his ultimate views. In the mean time we may proceed with the account of the principles of the fyftem.

Spartacus to Cato.

"Nothing would be more profitable to us than a "right hiftory of mankind. Defpotifm has robbed "them of their liberty. How can the weak obtain "protection? Only by union; but this is rare. No-"thing can bring this about but hidden focieties. "Hidden fchools of wifdom are the means which will one day free men from their bonds. Thefe have in "all ages been the archives of nature, and of the rights of men; and by them fhall human nature be "raifed from her fallen ftate. Princes and nations fhall vanifh from the earth. The human race will then become one family, and the world will be the dwelling of rational men.

" Morality alone can do this. The Head of every family will be what Abraham was, the patriarch, the prieft, and the unlettered lord of his family, and Reafon will be the code of laws to all mankind. This," fays Spartacus, " is our GREAT SECRET. True, there may be fome diffurbance, but by and " by

" by the unequal will become equal; and after the ftorm all will be calm. Can the unhappy confequences remain when the grounds of diffention are removed? Roufe yourfelves therefore, O men! affert your rights, and then will Reafon rule with unperceived fway; and ALL SHALL BE HAPPY.*

"Morality will perform all this; and morality is "the fruit of Illumination; duties and rights are reci-"procal. Where Octavius has no right, Cato owes him no duty. Illumination fhews us our rights, and Morality follows; that Morality which teaches us to be of age, to be out of wardenship, to be full grown, and to walk without the leading strings of priess and "princes."

" Jefus of Nazareth, the Grand Mafter of our Or-" der, appeared at a time when the world was in the " utmost diforder, and among a people who for ages " had groaned under the yoke of bondage. He taught them the leffons of Reafon. To be more effective, " he took in the aid of Religion-of opinions which " were current-and, in a very clever manner, he com-" bined his fecret doctrines with the popular religion, " and with the cuftoms which lay to his hand. In " thefe he wrapped up his leffons-he taught by para-" bles. Never did any prophet lead men fo eafily and " fo fecurely along the road of liberty. He concealed " the precious meaning and confequences of his doc-" trines; but fully disclosed them to a chosen few. He " fpeaks of a kingdom of the upright and faithful; his " Father's kingdom, whofe children we alfo are. Let " us only take Liberty and Equality as the great aim " of

* Happy France ! Reader, are you not curious to learn fomething of this all-powerful morality, fo operative on the heart of the truly illuminated-of this disciplina arcani, entrusted only to the chosen few, and handed down to Professor Weishaupt, to Spartacus, and his affociates, who have cleared it of the rubbish heaped on it by the dim-fighted Mafons, and now beaming in its native lustre on the minds of the Areopagita? The teachers of ordinary Chriftianity have been labouring for almost 2000 years, with the New Testament in their hands ; many of them with great addrefs, and many, I believe, with honeft zeal. But alas ! they cannot produce fuch wonderful and certain effects, (for observe, that Weishaupt repeatedly affures us that his means are certain,) probably for want of this disciplina arcani, of whole efficacy fo much is faid. Most fortunately, Spartacus has given us a brilliant specimen of the ethics which illuminated himfelf on a trying occafion, where an ordinary Christian would have been much perplexed, or would have taken a road widely different from that of this illustrious apostle of light. And feeing that feveral of the Arecpagitae co-operated in the transaction, and that it was carefully concealed from the profane and dim-fighted world, we can have no doubt but that it was conducted according to the disciplina arcani of IIlumination. I shall give it in his own words.

Spartacus to Marius, September 1783.

"I am now in the most embarrassing fituation; it "robs me of all rest, and makes me unsit for every "thing.

" thing. I am in danger of lofing at once my honour " and my reputation, by which I have long had fuch " influence. What think you?—my fifter-in-law is " with child. I have fent her to Euriphon, and am "endeavouring to procure a marriage-licence from Rome. How much depends on this uncertainty— and there is not a moment to lofe. Should I fail, " what is to be done? What a return do I make by " this to a perfon to whom I am fo much obliged !" (We shall fee the probable meaning of this exclama-tion by and by). "We have tried every method in "our power to destroy the child; and I hope she is " determined on every thing-even d-." (Can this mean death ?) " But alas ! Euriphon is, I fear, too ti-" mid," (alas ! poor woman, thou art now under the disciplina arcani,) " and I see no other expedient. " Could I be but affured of the filence of Celsus, (a " phyfician at Ingolftadt,) he can relieve me, and he " promised me as much three years ago. Do speak to " him, if you think he will be ftaunch. I would not let " Cato" (his dearest friend, and his chief or only confident in the scheme of Illumination) "know it yet, " becaufe the affair in other respects requires his whole "friendship." (Cato had all the pretty receipts.) " Could you but help me out of this distress, you " would give me life, honour, and peace, and frength " to work again in the great caufe. If you cannot, be affured I will venture on the most desperate stroke," (poor fifter !) " for it is fixed .- I will not lofe my ho-" nour. I cannot conceive what devilhas made me go " aftray-me who bave always been fo careful on fuch occafions. As yet all is quiet, and none know of it but ¢¢, " you and Euriphon. Were it but time to undertake any thing—but alas ! it is the fourth month. Those " damned priests too-for the action is fo criminally " accounted by them, and fcandalifes the blood. This " makes

" makes the utmost efforts and the most defperate " measures absolutely necessary."

It will throw fome light on this transaction if we read a letter from Spartacus to Cato about this time.

" One thing more, my deareft friend-Would it be " agreeable to you to have me for a brother-in-law? " If this should be agreeable, and if it can be brought about without prejudice to my honour, as I hope it 66 " may, I am not without hopes that the connection " may take place. But in the mean time keep it a " fecret, and only give me permiffion to enter into " correspondence on the subject with the good lady, " to whom I beg you will offer my refpectful compli-" ments, and I will explain myfelf more fully to you " by word of mouth, and tell you my whole fituation. " But I repeat it-the thing must be gone about with " addrefs and caution. I would not for all the world " deceive a perfon who certainly has not deferved fo " of me."

What interpretation can be put on this? Cato feems to be brother to the poor woman-he was unwittingly to furnish the drugs, and he was to be dealt with about confenting to a marriage, which could not be altogether agreeable to him, fince it required a dispensation, fhe being already the fifter-in-law of Weifhaupt, either the filter of his former wife, or the widow of a decealed brother. Or perhaps Spartacus really wifhes to marry Cato's fifter, a different perfon from the poor woman in the ftraw; and he conceals this adventure from his trufty friend Cato, till he fees what becomes of it. The child may perhaps be got rid of, and then Spartacus is a free man. There is a letter to Cato, thanking him for his friendship in the affair of the childbut it gives no light. I meet with another account, that the fifter of Zwack threw herfelf from the top of a tower, and beat out her brains. But it is not faid that that it was an only fifter; if it was, the probability is, that Spartacus had paid his addreffes to her, and fuçceeded, and that the fubfequent affair of his marriage with his fifter-in-law, or fomething worfe, broke her heart. This feems the beft account of the matter. For Hertel (Marius) writes to Zwack in November 1782: "Spartacus is this day gone home, but has left "his fifter-in-law pregnant behind (this is from Baffus "Hoff). About the new year he hopes to be made "merry by a ——, who will be before all kings and "princes—a young Spartacus. The Pope alfo will "refpect him, and legitimate him before the time."

Now, vulgar Chriftian, compare this with the former declaration of Weifhaupt, where he appeals to the tenor of his former life, which had been fo feverely ferutinifed, without diminifling his high reputation and great influence, and his ignorance and abhorrence of all those things found in Cato's repositories. You fee this was a furprife—he had formerly proceeded cautioufly—" He is the best man," fays Spartacus, " who best conceals his faults."—He was difappointed by Celfus, who had promised him his affistance on fuch occonfions three years ago, during all which time he had been buly in " forming himself." How far he has advanced, the reader may judge.

One is curious to know what became of the poor woman: fhe was afterwards taken to the houfe of Baron Baffus; but here the foolifh woman, for want of that courage which Illumination and the bright profpect of eternal fleep fhould have produced, took fright at the difciplini arcani, left the houfe, and in the hidden fociety of a midwife and nurfe brought forth a young Spartacus, who now lives to thank his father for his endeavours to murder him. A "damned prieft," the good Bifhop of Freyfingen, knowing the cogent reafons, procured the difpenfation, and Spartacus was obliged, obliged, like another dim-fighted mortal, to marry her. The fcandal was hufhed, and would not have been difcovered had it not been for thefe private writings.

But Spartacus fays " that when you think " him funk to the bottom, he will fpring up with " double vigour." In a fubfequent work, called Short Amendment of my Plan, he fays, " If men were " not habituated to wicked manners, his letters would " be their own justification." He does not fay that he is without fault; " but they are faults of the under-" ftanding—not of the heart. He had, first of all, to " form himfelf; and this is a work of time." In the affair of his fifter-in-law he admits the facts, and the attempts to deftroy the child; " but this is far from " proving any depravity of heart. In his condition, " his honour at stake, what elfe was left him to do? " His greatest enemies, the Jesuits, have taught that " in fuch a cafe it is lawful to make away with the " child," and he quotes authorities from their books.* " In the introductory fault he has the example of the "best of men. The fecond was its natural confe-"quence, it was altogether involuntary, and, in the " eye of a philosophical judge" (I presume of the Gal-lic School) " who does not square himself by the harsh " letters of a blood-thirsty lawgiver, he has but a very " triffing account to fettle. He had become a public " teacher, and was greatly followed; this example " might have ruined many young men. The eyes of the "Order alfo were fixed on him. The edifice rested " on his credit; had he fallen, be could no longer have " been R

* This is flatly contradicted in a pamphlet by F. Stuttler, a Catholic clergyman of most respectable character, who here exposes, in the most incontrovertible manner, the impious plots of Weishaupt, . his total difregard to truth, his counterfeit antiques, and all his lies against the Jesuits. " been in a condition to treat the matters of virtue fo as to "make a lafting imprefien. It was chiefly his anxiety "to fupport the credit of the Order which determined "him to take this ftep. It makes for him, but by no "means against him; and the perfons who are most in fault are the flavish inquifitors, who have published the transaction, in order to make his character more remarkable, and to hurt the Order through his perfon; and they have not forupled, for this hel-"lish purpose, to ftir up a child against his father !!!"

I make no reflections on this very remarkable, and highly ufeful ftory, but content myfelf with faying, that this juftification by Weifbaupt (which I have been careful to give in his own words) is the greateft infrance of effrontery and infult on the fentiments of mankind that I have ever met with. We are all fuppofed as completely corrupted as if we had lived under the full blaze of Illumination.

In other places of this curious correspondence we learn that Minos, and others of the Areopagita, wanted to introduce Atheifm at once, and not go hedging in the manner they did; affirming it was eafier to thew at once that Atheifm was friendly to fociety, than to explain all their Mafonic Chriftianity, which they were afterwards to fhew to be a bundle of lies. Indeed this purpofe, of not only abolishing Christianity, but all positive religion whatever, was Weishaupt's favourite scheme from the beginning. Before he canvassed for his Order, in 1774, he published a fictitious antique, which he called Sidonii Apcllinarus Fragmenta, to prepare (as he expressly fays in another place) mens minds for the doctrines of Reason, which contains all the detestable doctrines of Robinet's book Dela Nature. The publication of the second part was stopped. Weishaupt fays in his APOLOGY FOR THE ILLUMINATI, that before 1780 he had retracted his opinions about Materialifm.

alism, and about the inexpediency of Princes. But this is falfe: Philo fays expressly, that every thing remained on its original footing in the whole practice and dogmas of the Order when he quitted it in July 1784. All this was concealed, and even the abominable Masonry, in the account of the Order which Weishaupt published at Regensburg; and it required the constant efforts of Philo to prevent bare or flat Atheifm from being uniformly taught in their degrees. He had told the council that Zeno would not be under a roof with a man who denied the immortality of the foul. He complains of Minus's cramming irreligion down their throats in every meeting, and fays, that he frightened many from entering the Order. " Truth," fays Philo, " is a clever, but a modest girl, who must " be led by the hand like a gentlewoman, but not " kicked about like a whore." Spartacus complains. much of the squeamishness of Philo; yet Philo is not a great deal behind him in irreligion. When defcribing to Cato the Christianity of the Priest-degree, as he had manufactured it, he fays, " It is all one whe-" ther it be true or falfe, we must have it, that we " may tickle those who have a hankering for religion." All the odds feems to be, that he was of a gentler difpolition, and had more deference even for the abfurd prejudices of others. In one of his angry letters to Cato he fays: " The vanity and felf-conceit of Spar-" tacus would have got the better of all prudence, had " I not checked him, and prevailed on the Areopagitæ but to defer the development of the bold principles ٢٢ -" till we had firmly fecured the man. I even wished " to entice the candidate the more by giving him back " all his former bonds of fecrecy, and leaving him at " liberty to walk out without fear; and I am certain " that they were, by this time, fo engaged that we " fhould not have loft one man. But Spartacus had ¢ (composed an exhibition of his last principles, for a " discourse difcourfe of reception, in which he painted his three "favourite mysterious degrees, which were to be conferred by him alone, in colours which had fafcinated his own fancy. But they were the colours of hell, and would have fcared the most intrepid; and because I represented the danger of this, and by force obtained the omission of this picture, he became my implacable enemy. I abhor treachery and profligacy, and leave him to blow himself and his Order into the air."

Accordingly this happened. It was this which terrified one of the four profeffors, and made him impart his doubts to the reft. Yet Spartacus feems to have profited by the apprehensions of Philo; for in the last reception, he, for the first time, exacts a bond from the intrant, engaging himself for ever to the Order, and swearing that he will never draw back. Thus admitted, he becomes a fure card. The course of his life is in the hands of the Order, and his thoughts on a thousand dangerous points; his reports concerning his neighbours and friends; in short, his honour and his neck. The Deist, thus led on, has not far to go before he becomes a Naturalist or Atheist; and then the eternal step of death crowns all his humble hopes.

Before giving an account of the higher degrees, I shall just extract from one letter more on a singular subject.

Minos to Sebastian, 1782.

" The propofal of Hercules to eftablish a Minerval fchool for girls is excellent, but requires much circumfpection. Philo and I have long conversed on this subject. We cannot improve the world without improving women, who have such a mighty infuence on the men. But how shall we get hold of "them?

" them? How will their relations, particularly their " mothers, immersed in prejudices, confent that others " shall influence their education? We must begin with " grown girls. Hercules propoles the wife of Ptole-" my Magus. I have no objection; and I have four " ftep-daughters, fine girls. The oldeft in particular " is excellent. She is twenty-four, has read much, is " above all prejudices, and in religion fhe thinks as I do. " They have much acquaintance among the young la-" dies their relations. (N. B. We don't know the rank " of Minos, but as he does not use the word Damen, " but Frauenzimmer, it is probable that it is not high.) " It may immediately be a very pretty Society, under the management of Ptolemy's wife, but really un-" der bis management. You must contrive pretty de-"grees, and dreffes, and ornaments, and elegant and "decent rituals. No man must be admitted. This " will make them become more keen, and they will " go much farther than if we were prefent, or than if "they thought that we knew of their proceedings. "Leave them to the fcope of their own fancies, and they will foon invent myfteries which will put us to " the blufh, and create an enthufiafm which we can " never equal. They will be our great apostles. Re-" flect on the respect, nay the awe and terror inspired ⁴⁵ by the female mystics of antiquity. (Think of the ⁴⁵ Daniads—think of the Theban Bacchantes.) Ptole-" my's wife mult direct them, and the will be inftruct-" ed by Ptomlemy, and my step-daughters will con-fult with me. We must always be at hand to pre-" vent the introduction of any improper queftion. We " must prepare themes for their discussion-thus we " shall confess them, and inspire them with our senti-" ments. No man however must come near them. " This will fire their roving fancies, and we may ex-" pect rare mysteries. But I am doubtful whether " this this Affociation will be durable. Women are fickle and impatient. Nothing will pleafe them but hur-66 " rying from degree to degree, through a heap of in-" fignificant ceremonies, which will foon lofe their " novelty and influence. To reft ferioufly in one " rank, and to be still and filent when they have found " out that the whole is a cheat, (hear the words of an " experienced Mafon,) is a tafk of which they are in-"" capable. They have not our motives to perfevere " for years, allowing themfelves to be led about, and " even then to hold their tongues when they find that " they have been deceived. Nay there is a rifk that " they may take it into their heads to give things an " opposite turn, and then, by voluptuous allurements, " heightened by affected modefty and decency, which " give them an irrefiftible empire over the best men, " they may turn our Order upfide down, and in their " turn will lead the new one."

Such is the information which may be got from the private correspondence. It is needless to make more extracts of every kind of vice and trick. I have taken fuch as fhew a little of the plan of the Order, as far as the degree of Illuminatus Minor, and the vile purpofes which are concealed under all their fpecious declamation. A very minute account is given of the plan, the ritual, ceremonies, &c. and even the inftructions and discourses, in a book called the Achte Illuminat, published at Edessa (Frankfurt) in 1787. Philo fays, " that this is quite accurate, but that he does " not know the author." I proceed to give an account of their higher degrees, as they are to be feen in the book called Neueste Arbeitung des Spartacus und Philo. And the authenticity of the accounts is attefted by Grollman, a private gentleman of independent fortune, who read them, figned and fealed by Spartacus and the Areopagita.

Aysteries,	Leffer {Prefbyter, Prieft, Prince, Regent, Greater { Magus, Rex.

The reader must be almost fick of fo much villany, and would be difgusted with the minute detail, in which the cant of the Order is ringing continually in his ears. I shall therefore only give such a short extract as may fix our notions of the object of the Order, and the morality of the means employed for attaining it. We need not go back to the lower degrees, and shall begin with the ILLUMINATUS DIRIGENS, or Scotch KNIGHT.

After a fhort introduction, teaching us how the holy fecret Chapter of Scotch Knights is affembled, we have, I. Fuller accounts and inftructions relating to the whole. II. Inftructions for the lower claffes of Mafonry. III. Inftructions relating to Mafon Lodges in general. IV. Account of a reception into this degree, with the bond which each fubfcribes before he can be admitted. V. Concerning the Solemn Chapter for reception. VI. Opening of the Chapter. VII. Ritual of Reception, and the Oath., VIII. Shutting of the Chapter. IX. Agapé, Agapé, or Love-Feaft. X. Ceremonies of the confecration of the Chapter. Appendix A, Explanation of the Symbols of Free Mafonry. B, Catechifm for the Scotch Knight. C, Secret Cypher.

In Nº I. it is faid that the " chief ftudy of the " Scotch Knight is to work on all men in fuch a way " as is most infinuating. II. He must endeavour to " acquire the poffession of confiderable property. III. " In all Mafon Lodges we must try fecretly to get the " upper hand. The Mafons do not know what Free-" Mafonry is, their high objects, nor their higheft " Superiors, and fhould be directed by those who will " lead them along the right road. In preparing a can-"didate for the degree of Scotch Knighthood, we must bring him into dilemmas by enfnaring questions. cc c: -We must endeavour to get the disposal of the money of the Lodges of the Free Masons, or at least ٢, take care that it be applied to purpofes favourable • to our Order-but this must be done in a way that " " shall not be remarked. Above all, we must push " forward with all our skill, the plan of Eclectic Ma-" fonry, and for this purpofe follow up the circular " letter already fent to all the Lodges with every " thing that can increase their prefent embarrassment." In the bond of Nº IV. the candidate binds himfelf to " confider and treat the Illuminati as the Superiors of " Free Masonry, and endeavour in all the Mason " Lodges which he frequents, to have the Mafonry of " the Illuminated, and particularly the Scotch Novi-" tiate, introduced into the Lodge." (This is not very different from the Masonry of the Chevalier de l'Aigle of the Rofaic Masonry, making the Master's degree a fort of commemoration of the passion, but without giving that character to Christianity which is peculiar to Illuminatifm.) Jefus Chrift is reprefented as the enemy of superstitious observances, and the affertor fertor of the Empire of Reafon and of Brotherly love, and his death and memory as dear to mankind. This evidently paves the way for Weishaupt's Christianity. The Scotch Knight alfo engages "to confider the " Superiors of the Order as the unknown Superiors of " Free Masonry, and to contribute all he can to their " gradual union." In the Oath, Nº VII. the candidate fays, " I will never more be a flatterer of the great, " I will never be a lowly fervant of princes; but I will " ftrive with fpirit, and with address, for virtue, wif-" dom, and liberty. I will powerfully oppose fuper-" ftition, flander, and defpotifm; fo that, like a true " fon of the Order, I may ferve the world. 1 will " never facrifice the general good, and the happinefs " of the world, to my private interest. I will boldly " defend my brother against flander, will follow out " the traces of the pure and true Religion pointed out " to me in my infructions, and in the doctrines of " Mafonry; and will faithfully report to my Su-" periors the progrefs I make therein."

When he gets the ftroke which dubs him a Knight, the Prefes fays to him, "Now prove thyfelf, by thy " ability, equal to Kings, and never from this time " forward bow thy knee to one who is, like thyfelf but " a man."

Nº IX. is an account of the Love-Feaft.

1/t, There is a Table Lodge, opened as usual, but in virtue of the ancient Master-word. Then it is faid, " Let moderation, fortitude, morality, and genuine " love of the Brethren, with the overflowing of inno-" cent and careless mirth reign here." (This is almost verbatim from Toland.)

2d, In the middle of a bye-table is a chalice, a pot of wine, an empty plate, and a plate of unleavened bread—All is covered with a green cloth.

Ş

3d, When

CHAP. II.

3d, When the Table Lodge is ended, and the Prefect fees no obftacle, he ftrikes on this bye-table the ftroke of Scotch Mafler, and his fignal is repeated by the Senior Warden. All are ftill and filent. The Prefect lifts off the cloth.

4tb, The Prefect asks, whether the Knights are in the disposition to partake of the Love-Feast in earnest, peace, and contentment. If none hesitates or offers to retire, he takes the plate with the bread and fays,

" J. of N. our Grand-Mafter, in the night in which "he was betrayed by his friends, perfecuted for his "love for truth, imprifoned, and condemned to die, "affembled his trufty Brethren, to celebrate his laft" Love-Feaft—which is fignified to us in many ways. "He took bread (taking it) and broke it (breaking "it) and bleffed it, and gave it to his difciples, &c. "—This fhall be the mark of our Holy Union, &c. "Let each of you examine his heart, whether love "reigns in it, and whether he, in full imitation of our "Grand-Mafter, is ready to lay down his life for his "Brethren.

" Thanks be to our Grand-Mafter, who has appointed this feaft as a memorial of his kindnefs, for the uniting of the hearts of thofe who love him.— Go in peace, and bleffed be this new Affociation which we have formed.—Bleffed be ye who remain loyal and ftrive for the good caufe."

5th, The Prefect immediately closes the Chapter with the usual ceremonies of the Loge de Table.

6th, It is to be observed, that no prieft of the Order must be present at this Love-Feast, and that even the Brother Servitor quits the Lodge.

I must observe here, that Philo, the manufacturer of this ritual, has done it very injudiciously; it has no refemblance whatever to the Love-Feast of the primitive Christians, and is merely a copy of a similar thing in in one of the fteps of French Mafonry. Philo's reading in church-hiftory was probably very fcanty, or he trufted that the candidates would not be very nice in their examination of it, and he imagined that it would do well enough, and "tickle fuch as had a religious "hankering." Spartacus difliked it exceedingly—it did not accord with his ferious conceptions, and he juftly calls it Jouer la Religion.

The difcourse of reception is to be found also in the fecret correspondence (Nachtrag II. Abtheilung, p. 44.). But it is needless to infert it here. I have given the fubstance of this and of all the Cosmo-political declamations already in the panegeric introduction to the account of the process of education. And in Spartacus's letter, and in Philo's, I have given an abstract of the introduction to the explanation given in this degree of the fymbols of Free Masonry. With respect to the explanation itfelf, it is as flovenly and wretched as can be imagined, and fhews that Spartacus trufted to much more operative principles in the human heart for the reception of his nonsense than the dictates of unbiassed reason. None but promising subjects were admitted thus far-fuch as would not boggle; and their principles were already fufficiently apparent to affure him that they would be contented with any thing that made game of religion, and would be diverted by the ferioufnefs which a chance devotee might exhibit during thefe filly caricatures of Christianity and Free Masonry. But there is confiderable addrefs in the way that Spartacus prepares his pupils for having all this mummery fhewn in its true colours, and overturned,

" Examine, read, think on these fymbols, There are many things which one cannot find out without a guide, nor even learn without instruction. They require study and zeal. Should you in any future period think that you have conceived a clearer nostudy tion "tion of them, that you have found a paved road, "declare your difcoveries to your Superiors; it is "thus that you improve your mind; they expect this of you; they know the true path—but will not point "it out—enough if they affift you in every approach "to it, and warn you when you recede from it. They "have even put things in your way to try your powers "of leading yourfelf through the difficult track of difcovery. In this procefs the weak head finds only "child's play—the initiated finds objects of thought which language cannot exprefs, and the thinking "mind finds food for his faculties." By fuch forewarnings as thefe Weifhaupt leaves room for any deviation, for any fentiment or opinion of the individual that he may afterwards choofe to encourage, and " to "whilfper in their ear (as he expreffes it) many things "which he did not find it prudent to infert in a print-"ed compend."

But all the principles and aim of Spartacus and of his Order are most distinctly seen in the third or Mystery Class. I proceed therefore to give some account of it. By the Table it appears to have two degrees, the Lesser and the Greater Mysteries, each of which have two departments, one relating chiefly to Religion and the other to Politics.

The Prieft's degree contains, 1. an Introduction. 2. Further Accounts of the Reception into this degree. 3. What is called Inftruction in the Third Chamber, which the candidate must read over. 4. The Ritual of Reception. 5. Inftruction for the First Degree of the Prieft's Clais, called Inftructio in Scientificis. 6. Account of the Confectation of a Dean, the Superior of this Lower Order of Priefts.

The Regent degree contains, 1. Directions to the Provincial concerning the difpenfation of this degree. 2. Ritual of Reception. 3. System of Direction for the the whole Order. 4. Instruction for the whole Regent degree. 5. Instruction for the Prefects or Local Superiors. 6. Instruction for the Provincials.

The most remarkable thing in the Priest's degree is the Instruction in the Third Chamber. It is to be found in the private correspondence (Nachtrage Original Schriften 1787, 2d. Abtheilung, page 44.). There it has the title Discourse to the Illuminati Dirigentes, or Scotch Knights. In the critical history, which is annexed to the Neuesse Arbeitung, there is an account given of the reason for this denomination; and notice is taken of some differences between the instructions here contained and that discourse.

This inftruction begins with fore complaints of the low condition of the human race; and the caufes are deduced from religion and state-government. " Men " originally led a patriarchal life, in which every fa-" ther of a family was the fole lord of his house and " his property, while he himfelf poffeffed general free-" dom and equality. But they fuffered themfelves to " be oppreffed-gave themfelves up to civil focieties, " and formed states. Even by this they fell; and this " is the fall of man, by which they were thrust into unspeakable misery. To get out of this state, to CC. " be freed and born again, there is no other mean " than the use of pure Reason, by which a general " morality may be eftablished, which will put man in " a condition to govern himfelf, regain his original " worth, and difpenfe with all political fupports, and and particularly with rulers. This can be done in 6C no other way but by fecret affociations, which will 66 by degrees, and in filence, poffefs themfelves of the c c " government of the States, and make use of those " means for this purpofe which the wicked use for at-" attaining their bafe ends. Princes and Priefts are " in particular, and kat' exochen the wicked, whole " hands

" hands we must tie up by means of these associations, " if we cannot root them out altogether.

"Kings are parents. The paternal power ceafes with the incapacity of the child; and the father injures his child, if he pretends to retain his right beyond this period. When a nation comes of age, their ftate of wardfhip is at an end."

Here follows a long declamation against patriotifm, as a narrow-minded principle when compared with true Cofmo-politifm. Nobles are reprefented as " a " race of men that ferve not the nation but the Prince, " whom a hint from the Sovereign stirs up against the " nation, who are retained fervants and ministers of " defpotifm, and the mean for oppressing national li-" berty. Kings are accused of a tacit convention, " under the flattering appellation of the balance of " power, to keep nations in subjection.

" The means to regain Reason her rights-to raise " liberty from its ashes-to restore to man his original rights-to produce the previous revolution in the mind of man-to obtain an eternal victory over op-¢C. c c preffors-and to work the redemption of mankind, CC . " are fecret fchools of wifdom. When the worthy " have ftrengthened their affociation by numbers, they are fecure, and then they begin to become powercc ful, and terrible to the wicked, of whom many will, •• " for fafety, amend themfelves-many will come over " to our party, and we shall bind the hands of the rest, ¢¢. and finally conquer them. Whoever fpreads general Illumination, augments mutual fecurity; Illu-66 mination and fecurity make princes unnecessary; •• " Illumination performs this by creating an effective Morality, and Morality makes a nation of full age fit to govern itfelf; and fince it is not impoffible to " produce a just Morality, it is possible to regain free-" dom for the world."

€HAP. II.

"We must therefore strengthen our band, and establish a legion, which shall restore the rights of man, original liberty and independence.

" Jefus Chrift"—but I am fick of all this. The following queftions are put to the candidate:

1. "Are our civil conditions in the world the defti-"nations that feem to be the end of our nature, or the "purpofes for which man was placed on this earth, or are they not? Do ftates, civil obligations, popular religion, fulfil the intentions of men who eftablifhed them? Do fecret affociations promote inftruction and true human happinefs, or are they the children of neceffity, of the multifarious wants, of unnatural conditions, or the inventions of vain and cunning men?"

2. "What civil affociation, what fcience do you" "think to the purpofe, and what are not?"

3. " Has there ever been any other in the world, is " there no other more fimple condition, and what do " you think of it?"

4. "Does it appear poffible, after having gone "through all the nonentities of our civil conftitutions, to recover for once our first fimplicity, and get back to this honourable uniformity?"

5. "How can one begin this noble attempt; by means of open fupport, by forcible revolution, or by what other way?"

6. "Does Chriftianity give us any hint to this pur-"pofe? Does it not recognife fuch a bleffed condition "as once the lot of man, and as ftill recoverable?"

7. "But is this holy religion the religion that is "now profeffed by any fect on earth, or is it a bet-"ter?"

8. "Can we learn this religion—can the world, as " it is, bear the light? Do you think that it would be " of fervice, before numerous obftacles are removed,"
" if

" if we taught men this purified religion, fublime phi-" lofophy, and the art of governing themfelves? Or

" would not this hurt, by roufing the interefted paffions of men habituated to prejudices, who would oppofe this as wicked ?"

9. " May it not be more advisable to do away these " corruptions by little and little, in filence, and for " this purpose to propagate these falutary and heart-" confoling doctrines in fecret?"

10. "Do we not perceive traces of fuch a fecret doctrine in the ancient fchools of philofophy, in the doctrines and inftructions of the Bible, which Chrift, the Redeemer and Deliverer of the human race, gave to his trufty difciples?—Do you not obferve an education, proceeding by fteps of this kind, handed down to us from his time till the prefent?"

In the ceremonial of Reception, crowns and fceptres are reprefented as tokens of human degradation. "The " plan of operation, by which our higher degrees act, " muft work powerfully on the world, and muft give " another turn to all our prefent conflictutions."

Many other queftions are put to the pupil during his preparation, and his answers are given in writing. Some of these rescripts are to be found in the secret correspondence. Thus, "How far is the polition true, se that all those means may be used for a good purpose " which the wicked have employed for a bad?" And along with this queftion there is an injunction to take counsel from the opinions and conduct of the learned and worthy out of the fociety. In one of the answers, the example of a great philosopher and Cosmopolite is adduced, who betrayed a private correspondence entrusted to him, for the fervice of freedom: the cafe was Doctor Franklin's. In another, the power of the Order was extended to the putting the individual to death; and the reason given was, that " this power was allowed « to

to all Sovereignties, for the good of the State, and C C | therefore belonged to the Order, which was to go-CC. " direction of education-of church-management-of " the professional chair, and of the pulpit. We mult " bring our opinions into fashion by every art-spread them among the people by the help of young wri-66 We must preach the warmest concern for hu-CC ters. " manity, and make people indifferent to all other relations, "We must take care that our writers be well puffed, " and that the Reviewers do not depreciate them; " therefore we must endeavour by every mean to gain " over the Reviewers and Journalists; and we must " also try to gain the booksellers, who in time will fee " that it is their interest to fide with us."

I conclude this account of the degree of Prefbyter with remarking, that there were two copies of it employed occafionally. In one of them all the most offensive things in respect of church and state were left out. The fame thing was done in the degree of Chevalier du Soleil of the French Masonry. I have seen three different forms.

In the Regent degree, the proceedings and inftructions are conducted in the fame manner. Here, it is faid, "We muft as much as poffible felect for this de-"gree perfons who are free, independent of all princes; "particularly fuch as have frequently declared them-"felves difcontented with the ufual inftitutions, and "their wiftes to fee a better government effablifhed."

Catching queftions are put to the candidate for this degree; fuch as,

I. "Would the fociety be objectionable which.
"fhould (till the greater revolution of nature fhould "be ripe) put monarchs and rulers out of the condition to do harm; which fhould in filence prevent "the abufe of power, by furrounding the great with T "its

" its members, and thus not only prevent their doing "mifchief, but even make them do good ?"

2. " Is not the objection unjuft, That fuch a Soci-"ciety may abufe its power? Do not our rulers frequently abufe their power, though we are filent? "This power is not fo fecure as in the hands of our Members, whom we train up with fo much care, and place about princes after mature deliberation and choice. If any government can be harmlefs which is erected by man, furely it muft be ours, which is founded on morality, forefight, talents, liberty, and virtue," &c.

The candidate is prefented for reception in the character of a flave; and it is demanded of him what has brought him into this most miferable of all conditions. He answers—Society—the State—Submissiveness— Falfe Religion. A skeleton is pointed out to him, at the feet of which are laid a Crown and a Sword. He is asked, whether that is the skeleton of a King, a Nobleman, or a Beggar? As he cannot decide, the President of the meeting fays to him, "the character of "being a Man is the only one that is of importance."

In a long declamation on the hackneyed topics, we have here and there fome thoughts which have not yet come before us.

"We must allow the underlings to imagine, (but without telling them the truth,) that we direct all the Free Mason Lodges, and even all other Orders, and that the greatest monarchs are under our guidance, which indeed is here and there the case.

" There is no way of influencing men fo powerful-" ly as by means of the women. These should there-" fore be our chief study; we should infinuate our-" felves into their good opinion, give them hints of " emancipation from the tyranny of public opinion, " and of standing up for thems; it will be an im-" mense " menfe relief to their enflaved minds to be freed from any one bond of reftraint, and it will fire them the more, and caufe them to work for us with zeal, without knowing that they do fo; for they will only be indulging their own defire of perfonal admiration.

"We must win the common people in every corner. This will be obtained chiefly by means of the fchools, and by open, hearty behaviour, show, condefcension, popularity, and toleration of their prejudices, which we shall at leifure root out and dispel.

" If a writer publishes any thing that attracts notice, and is in itself just, but does not accord with our plan, we must endeavour to win him over, or decry him.

" A chief object of our care must be to keep down " that flavish veneration for princes which fo much " difgraces all nations. Even in the foi-difant free En-" gland, the filly Monarch fays, We are gracioufly " pleafed, and the more fimple people fay, Amen. Thefe " men, commonly very weak heads, are only the far-" ther corrupted by this fervile flattery. But let us at " once give an example of our fpirit by our behaviour " with Princes; we must avoid all familiarity-never " entrust ourselves to them-behave with precision, " but with civility, as to other men-fpeak of them " on an equal footing-this will in time teach them " that they are by nature men, if they have fense and " fpirit, and that only by convention they are Lords. "We must affiduously collect anecdotes, and the honourable and mean actions, both of the least and CC . " the greateft; and when their names occur in any re-" cords which are read in our meetings, let them " ever be accompanied by thefe marks of their real " worth.

" The

" The great firength of our Order lies in its concealment; let it never appear in any place in its own name, but always covered by another name, and another occupation. None is fitter than the three lower degrees of Free Masonry; the public is accustomed to it; expects little from it, and therefore takes little notice of it. Next to this the form of a learned or literary fociety is beft fuited to our purpose, and had Free Masonry not existed, this cover would have been employed; and it may be much more than a cover, it may be a powerful engine in our hands. By establishing reading focieties, and subscription libraries, and taking these under and supplying them through our labours, we may turn the public mind which way we will.

" In like manner we must try to obtain an influence in the military academies, (this may be of mighty confequence,) the printing-houses, bookfellers shops, chapters, and in short in all offices which have any effect, either in forming, or in managing, or even in directing the mind of man: painting and engraving are highly worth our care *."

"Could our Prefect" (obferve it is to the Illuminati Regentes he is fpeaking, whofe officers are Prefecti) "fill the judicatories of a ftate with our worthy members, he does all that man can do for the Order. It is better than to gain the Prince himfelf. Princes thould never get beyond the Scotch knighthood. They either never profecute any thing, or they twift every thing to their own advantage.

" A Literary Society is the most proper form for the introduction of our Order into any state where we are yet strangers." (Mark this!)

" The

* (They were firongly fuspected of having published fome fcandalous caricatures, and fome very immoral prints.) They fcrupled at no mean, however bafe, for corrupting the nation. Mirabeau had done the fame thing at Berlin. By political caricatures and filthy prints, they corrupt even fuch as cannot read. "The power of the Order must furely be turned to the advantage of its Members. All must be affisted. "They must be preferred to all perfons otherwise of equal merit. Money, fervices, honour, goods, and blood, must be expended for the fully proved Brethren, and the unfortunate must be relieved by the funds of the Society."

As evidence that this was not only their inftructions, but also their affiduous practice, take the following report from the overseer of Greece (Bavaria).

In Cato's band-writing.

" The number (about 600) of Members relates to Bavaria alone.

" In Munich there is a well-conftituted meeting of "Illuminati Majores, a meeting of excellent Illuminati "Minores, a respectable Grand Lodge, and two Mi-"nerval Assemblies. There is a Minerval Assembly at Freysfing, at Landsberg, at Burghausen, at Strafburg, at Ingolstadt, and at last at Regensburg*.

"At Munich we have bought a houfe, and by cle-"ver meafures have brought things fo far, that the citizens take no notice of it, and even fpeak of us with efteem. We can openly go to the houfe every day, and carry on the bufinefs of the Lodge. This is a great deal for this city. In the houfe is a good mufeum of natural hiftory, and apparatus for experiments: alfo a library which daily increafes. The garden is well occupied by botanic fpecimens, and the whole has the appearance of a fociety of zealous maturalifts. "We get all the literary journals. We take care,

" by well-timed pieces, to make the citizens and the Princes

" Princes a little more noticed for certain little flips.

"We oppose the monks with all our might, and with great fucces.

"The Lodge is conflituted entirely according to our fystem, and has broken off entirely from Berlin, and we have nearly finished our transactions with the Lodges of Poland, and shall have them under our direction.

" By the activity of our Brethren, the Jesuits have been kept out of all the professional chairs at Ingolftadt, and our friends prevail."

"The widow Duchefs has fet up her academy entirely according to our plan, and we have all the Profeffors in the Order. Five of them are excellent, and the pupils will be prepared for us.

"We have got Pylades put at the head of the Fifc, and he has the church-money at his difpofal. By properly using this money, we have been enabled to put our brother ——'s household in good order; which he had destroyed by going to the Jews. We have supported more Brethren under similar missortunes.

" Our Ghoftly Brethren have been very fortunate this laft year, for we have procured for them feveral good benefices, parifhes, tutorfhips, &c.

" Through our means Arminius and Cortes have gotten Profession for any of our younger Brethren have obtained Burfaries by our help.

"We have been very fuccefsful against the Jefuits, and brought things to fuch a bearing, that their revenues, fuch as the Mission, the Golden Alms, the Exercises, and the Conversion Box, are now under the management of our friends. So are also their concerns in the university and the German school foundations. The application of all will be determined prefently, and we have fix members and four friends " in the Court. This has cost our fenate fome nights " want of fleep.

" Two of our beft youths have got journies from the. " Court, and they will go to Vienna, where they will " do us great fervice.

" All the German Schools, and the Benevolent Society, are at last under our direction.

"We have got feveral zealous members in the courts of justice, and we are able to afford them pay, and other good additions.

" Lately, we have got poffeffion of the Bartholomew Inftitution for young clergymen, having fecured all its fupporters. Through this we fhall be able to fupply Bavaria with fit priefts.

"By a letter from Philo we learn, that one of the higheft dignities in the church was obtained for a zealous Illuminatus, in opposition even to the authority and right of the Bishop of Spire, who is reprefented as a bigoted and tyrannical prieft."

Such were the leffer mysteries of the Illuminati. But there remain the higher mysteries. The fystem of these has not been printed, and the degrees were conferred only by Spartacus himfelf, from papers which he never entrusted to any perfon. They were only read to the candidate, but no copy was taken. The publisher of the Neueste Arbeitung fays that he has read them (fo fays Grollman). He fays, " that in the first degree of " MAGUS OF PHILOSOPHUS, the doctrines are the " fame with those of Spinoza, where all is material, " God and the world are the fame thing, and all re-" ligion whatever is without foundation, and, the con-" trivance of ambitious men." The fecond degree, or Rex, teaches, " that every peafant, citizen, and " householder is a fovereign, as in the Patriarchal " ftate, and that nations must be brought back to that " ftate, by whatever means are conducible-peaceably,

THE ILLUMINATI.

" ably, if it can be done; but, if not, then by force "—for all fubordination mult vanish from the face of " the earth."

The author fays further, that the German Union was, to his certain knowledge, the work of the Illuminati.

The private correspondence that has been published is by no means the whole of what was discovered at Landshut and Bassus Hoff, and government got a great deal of useful information, which was concealed, both out of regard to the families of the perfons concerned, and also that the rest might not know the utmoss extent of the discovery, and be less on their guard. A third collection was found under the foundation of the house in which the Lodge Theodor vom guten Ratb had been held. But none of this has appeared. Enough furely has been discovered to give the public a very just idea of the designs of the Society and its connections.

I have not been able to find who perfonated Minos, Euriphon, Celfius, Mahomet, Hercules, Socrates, Philippo Strozzi, Euclides, and fome others who have been uncommonly active in carrying forward the great caufe.

I may now be permitted to make a few reflections on the accounts already given of this Order, which has fo diffinctly concentrated the cafual and fcattered efforts of its prompters, the Chevaliers Bienfaifants, the Philalethes, and Amis Reunis of France, and carried on the fyftem of enlightening and reforming the world.

The

^{1.} Groffe Absicht des Illuminaten Ordens.

The great aim profeffed by the Order is to make men bappy; and the means profeffed to be employed, as the only and furely effective, is making them good; and this is to be brought about by enlightening the mind, and freeing it from the dominion of fuperstition and prejudices. This purpose is effected by its producing a just and steady morality. This done, and becoming universal, there can be little doubt but that the peace of society will be the confequence,—that government, subordination, and all the difagreeable coercions of civil governments will be unnecessary,—and that fociety may go on peaceably in a state of perfect liberty and equality.

But furely it requires no angel from heaven to tell us that if every man is virtuous, there will be no vice; and that there will be peace on earth, and good-will between man and man, whatever be the differences of rank and fortune; fo that Liberty and Equality feem not to be the necessary consequences of this just Morality, nor necessary requisites for this national happines. We may queftion, therefore, whether the Illumination which makes this a neceffary condition is a clear and a pure light. It may be a false glare showing the object only on one fide, tinged with partial colours thrown on it by neighbouring objects. We see so much wifdom in the general plans of nature, that we are apt to think that there is the fame in what relates to the human mind, and that the God of nature accomplifhes his plans in this as well as in other inftances. We are even difposed to think that human nature would fuffer by it. The rational nature of man is not contented with meat and drink, and raiment, and shelter, but is alfo pleafed with exerting many powers and faculties, and with gratifying many taftes, which could hardly have existence in a fociety where all are equal. We fay that there can be no doubt but that the pleafure arifing from the contemplation of the works of artthe

the pleasure of intellectual cultivation, the pleasure of mere ornament, are rational, diftinguish man from a brute, and are fo general, that there is hardly a mind fo rude as not to feel them. Of all these, and of all the difficult sciences, all most rational, and in themfelves most innocent, and most delightful to a cultivated mind, we should be deprived in a fociety where all are equal. No individual could give employment to the talents necessary for creating and improving these ornamental comforts of life. We are abfolutely certain that, even in the most favourable fituations on the face of the earth, the most untainted virtue in every breast could not raife man to that degree of cultivation that is poffeffed by citizens very low in any of the ftates of Europe; and in the fituation of most countries we are acquainted with, the state of man would be much lower: for, at our very fetting out, we must grant that the liberty and equality here spoken of must be complete; for there must not be such a thing as a farmer and his cottager. This would be as unjuft, as much the cause of discontent, as the gentleman and the farmer.

This fcheme therefore feems contrary to the defigns of our Creator, who has every where placed us in thofe fituations of inequality that are here fo much reprobated, and has given us ftrong propenfities by which we relift thofe enjoyments. We alfo find that they may be enjoyed in peace and innocence. And laftly, we imagine that the villain, who, in the ftation of a profeffor, would plunder a prince, would alfo plunder the farmer if he were his cottager. The Illumination therefore that appears to have the beft chance of making mankind happy is that which will teach us the Morality which will refpect the comforts of cultivated Society, and teach us to protect the poffetfors in the innocent enjoyment of them ; that will enable us to perceive and admire the tafte and elegance elegance of Architecture and Gardening, without any wifh to fweep the palaces, the gardens, and their owner, from off the earth, merely becaufe he is their owner.

We are therefore fufpicious of this Illumination, and apt to afcribe this violent antipathy to Princes and fubordination to the very caufe that makes true Illumination, and just Morality proceeding from it, fo neceffary to public happinefs, namely, the vice and injustice of those who cannot innocently have the command of those offensive elegancies of human life. Luxurious tafte, keen defires, and unbridled paffions, would prompt to all this; and this Illumination is, as we fee, equivalent to them in effect. The aim of the Order is not to enlighten the mind of man, and fhew him his moral obligations, and by the practice of his duties to make fociety peaceable, poffeffion fecure, and coercion unneceffary, fo that all may be at reft and happy, even though all were equal; but to get rid of the coercion which must be employed in the place of Morality, that the innocent rich may be robbed with impunity by the idle and profligate poor. But to do this, an unjust casuistry must be employed instead of a just Morality; and this must be defended or fuggested, by misreprefenting the true state of man, and of his relation to the univerfe, and by removing the reftrictions of religion, and giving a fuperlative value to all those constituents of human enjoyment, which true Illumination shews us to be but very fmall concerns of a rational and virtuous mind. The more clofely we examine the principles and practice of the Illuminati, the more clearly do we perceive that this is the cafe. Their first and immediate aim is to get the poffeffion of riches, power, and influence, without industry; and to accomplish this, they want to abolish Christianity; and then diffolute manners and univerfal profligacy will procure them the adherence of all the wicked, and enable them to to overturn all the civil governments of Europe; after which they will think of farther conquefts, and extend their operations to the other quarters of the globe, till they have reduced mankind to the state of one undiftinguishable chaotic mass.

But this is too chimerical to be thought their real aim. Their Founder, I dare say, never entertained fuch hopes, nor troubled himfelf with the fate of diftant lands. But it comes in his way when he puts on the mask of humanity and benevolence: it mult embrace all mankind, only because it must be stronger than patriotifm and loyalty, which stand in his way. Obferve that Weishaupt took a name expressive of his principles. Spartacus was a gladiator, who headed an infurrection of Roman flaves, and for three years kept the city in terror. Weishaupt fays in one of his letters, " I never was fond of empty titles; but furely " that man has a childish foul who would not as rea-" dily chufe the name of Spartacus as that of Octa-" vius Augustus." The names which he gives to fe-veral of his gang express their differences of sentiments. Philo, Lucian, and others, are very fignificantly given to Knigge, Nicholai, &c. He was vain of the name Spartacus, becaufe he confidered himfelf as employed fomewhat in the fame way, leading flaves to freedom. Princes and Priests are mentioned by him on all occasions in terms of abhorrence.

Spartacus employs powerful means. The ftyle of the Jefuits, (as he fays,) he confiders every mean as confecrated by the end for which it is employed, and he fays with great truth,

" Flettere si nequeo superos, Acheronta movebo."

To fave his reputation, he fcruples not to murder his innocent child, and the woman whom he had held in his arms with emotions of fondnets and affection. But

But left this should appear too felfish a motive, he fays, " Had I fallen, my precious Order would have fallen " with me; the Order which is to blefs mankind. I " fhould not again have been able to fpeak of virtue fo " as to make any lafting impression. My example " might have ruined many young men." This he thinks will excufe, nay fanctify any thing. " My " letters are my greateft vindication." He employs the Christian Religion, which he thinks a falschood, and which he is afterwards to explode, as the mean for inviting Chriftians of every denomination, and gradually cajoling them, by clearing up their Christian doubts in fucceffion, till he lands them in Deism; or if he finds them unfit, and too religious, he gives them a Sta bene, and then laughs at the fears, or perhaps madnefs, in which he leaves them. Having got them the length of Deifm, they are declared to be fit, and he receives them into the higher mysteries. But lest they should ftill fhrink back, dazzled by the Pandemonian glare of Illumination which will now burft upon them, he exacts from them, for the first time, a bond of perfeverance. But, as Philo fays, there is little chance of tergiversation. The life and honour of most of the candidates are by this time in his hand. They have been long occupied in the vile and corrupting office of fpies on all around them, and they are found fit for their prefent honours, becaufe they have discharged this office to his fatisfaction, by the reports which they have given in, containing stories of their neighbours, nay even of their own gang. They may be ruined in the world by difclofing thefe, either privately or publicly. A man who had once brought himfelf into this perilous fituation durst not go back. He might have been left indeed in any degree of Illumination; and, if Religion has not been quite eradicated from his mind, he must be in that condition of painful anxiety and doubt doubt that makes him defperate, fit for the full operation of fanaticifm, and he may be engaged, in the caufe of God, "to commit all kind of wickednefs and greedi-"nefs." In this ftate of mind, a man fhuts his eyes, and rufhes on. Had Spartacus fuppofed that he was dealing with good men, his conduct would have been the reverfe of all this. There is no occafion for this bond from a perfon convinced of the excellency of the Order. But he knew them to be unprincipled, and that the higher mysteries were fo daring, that even fome of fuch men would ftart at them. But they must not blab.

Having thus got rid of Religion, Spartacus could with more fafety bring into view the great aim of all his efforts-to rule the world by means of his Order. As the immediate mean for attaining this, he holds out the profpect of freedom from civil fubordination. Perfect Liberty and Equality are interwoven with every thing; and the flattering thought is continually kept up, that ." by the wife contrivance of this Order, the " most complete knowledge is obtained of the real " worth of every perfon; the Order will, for its oron " fake, and therefore certainly, place every man in " that fituation in which he can be most effective. The " pupils are convinced that the Order will rule the " world. Every member therefore becomes a ruler." We all think ourfelves qualified to rule. The difficult task is to obey with propriety; but we are honestly generous in our prospects of future command. It is therefore an alluring thought, both to good and bad men. By this lure the Order will fpread. If they are active in infinuating their members into offices, and in keeping out others, (which the private correspondence shews to have been the case,) they may have had frequent experience of their fuccefs in gaining an influence on the world. This must whet their zeal. X Weifhaupt

Weishaupt was a fincere Cosmo-polite, he had the pleasure of seeing " his work prospering in his hands."

It furely needs little argument now to prove, that the Order of Illuminati had for its immediate object the abolishing of Christianity, (at least this was the intention of the Founder,) with the fole view of overturning the civil government, by introducing univerfal diffoluteness and profligacy of manners, and then getting the affiftance of the corrupted fubjects to overset the throne. The whole conduct in the preparation and instruction of the Presbyter and Regens is directed to this point. Philo fays, "I have been at unwearied " pains to remove the fears of fome who imagine that " our Superiors want to abolish Christianity; but by and by their prejudices will wear off, and they will " be more at their ease. Were I to let them know " that our General holds all Religion to be a lie, and " uses even Deifm, only to lead men by the nose-"Were I to connect myfelf again with the Free Ma-" fons, and tell them our defigns to ruin their Fra-66 ternity by this circular letter (a letter to the, Lodge in Courland)-Were I but to give the leaft hint to any of the Princes of Greece (Bavaria)-No, my .. 11 anger shall not carry me to far.-An Order, forfooth, 66 which in this manner abuses human nature-which 66 will fubject men to a bondage more intolerable than ¢ C Jefuitifm-I could put it on a refpectable footing, ¢¢. and the world would be ours. Should I mention 66 our fundamental principles, (even after all the pains 56 I have been at to mitigate them,) fo unqueftionably dangerous to the world, who would remain? What fignifies the innocent ceremonies of the Prieft's de-66 66 CC. gree, as I have composed it, in comparison with 6.6 your maxim, that we may use for a good end those ٢٢ means which the wicked employ for a bafe purpofe?" 66 Brutus Brutus writes, "Numenius now acquiefces in the "mortality of the foul; but, I fear we fhall lofe Ludovicus Bavarus. He told Spartacus, that he was miftaken when he thought that he had fwallowed his ftupid Mafonry. No, he faw the trick, and did not admire the end that required it. I don't know what to do; a Sta bene would make him mad, and he will blow us all up.

"The Order mult poffefs the power of life and death in confequence of our Oath; and with propriety, for the fame reafon, and by the fame right, that any government in the world poffeffes it: for the Order comes in their place, making them unneceffary. When things cannot be otherwife, and ruin would enfue if the Affociation did not employ this mean, the Order muft, as well as public rulers, employ it for the good of mankind; therefore for its own prefervation." (N. B. Obferve here the cafuiftry.) "Nor will the political conftitutions fuffer by this, for there are always thoufands equally ready and able to fupply the place."

We need not wonder that Diomedes told the Profeffors, "that death, inevitable death, from which no "potentate could protect them, awaited every traitor "of the Order;" nor that the French Convention propofed to take off the German Princes and Generals by fword or poifon, &c.

Spartacus might tickle the fancy of his Order with the notion of ruling the world; but I imagine that his own immediate object was ruling the Order. The happinefs of mankind was, like Weifhaupt's Chriftianity, a mere tool, a tool which the Regentes made a joke of. But Spartacus would rule the Regentes; this he could not fo eafily accomplifh. His delpotifm was infupportable to most of them, and finally brought all to light. When he could not perfuade them by his own firmnefs, and indeed by his fuperior talents and difinterestednets in other respects, and his unwearied activity, he employed jefuitical tricks, caufing them to fall out with each other, fetting them as fpies on each other, and feparating any two that he faw attached to each other, by making the one a Master of the other; and, in fhort, he left nothing undone that could fecure his uncontrolled command. This caufed Philo to quit the Order, and made Baffus, Ton Torring, Kreitmaier, and feveral other gentlemen, ceafe attending the meetings; and it was their mutual diffentions which made them speak too freely in public, and call on themfelves to much notice. At the time of the difcovery, the party of Weishaupt confisted chiefly of very mean people, devoted to him, and willing to execute his orders, that by being his fervants, they might have the pleafure of commanding others.

The objects, the undoubted objects of this Affociation, are furely dangerous and deteftable; namely, to overturn the prefent conflictutions of the European States, in order to introduce a chimera which the hiftory of mankind fhews to be contrary to the nature of man.

Naturam expellas furcâ, tamen usque recurret.

Suppofe it poffible, and done in peace, the new fyftem could not ftand unlefs every principle of activity in the human mind be enthralled, all incitement to exertion and induftry removed, and man brought into a condition incapable of improvement; and this at the expence of every thing that is valued by the beft of men —by mifery and devaftation—by loofening all the bands of fociety. To talk of morality and virtue in conjunction with fuch fchemes is an infult to common fenfe; diffolutenefs of manners alone can bring men to think of it.

Is it not aftonifhing, therefore, to hear people in this country express any regard for this inflitution? Is it not most mortifying to think that there are Lodges of Illuminated among us? I think that nothing bids fairer for weaning our inconfiderate countrymen from having any connection with them, than the faithful account here given. I hope that there are few, very few of our countrymen, and none whom we call friend, who can think that an Order which held fuch doctrines, and which practifed fuch things, can be any thing elfe than a ruinous Affociation, a gang of profligates. All their profeffions of the love of mankind are vain; their Illumination must be a bewildering blaze, and totally ineffectual for its purpose, for it has had no fuch influence on the leaders of the band; yet it feems quite adequate to the effects it has produced; for fuch are the characters of those who forget God.

If we in the next place attend to their mode of education, and examine it by those rules of common fense that we apply in other cafes of conduct, we shall find it equally unpromifing. The fystem of Illuminatism is one of the explanations of Free Masonry; and it has gained many partifans. These explanations rest their credit and their preference on their own merits. There is fomething in themfelves, or in one of them as diftinguished from another, which procures it the preference for its own fake. Therefore, to give this Order any dependence on Free Masonry is to degrade the Order. To introduce a Masonic Ritual into a manly inftitution, is to degrade it to a frivolous amusement for great children. Men really exerting themfelves to reform the world, and qualified for the tafk, must have been difgusted with such occupations. They betray a frivolous conception of the tafk in which they are really engaged. To imagine that men engaged in the ftruggle and rivalship of life, under the influence of felfift, felfish, or mean, or impetuous passions, are to be wheedled into candid fentiments, or a generous conduct, as a froward child may fometimes be made gen-tle and tractable by a rattle or humming-top, betrays a great ignorance of human nature, and an arrogant felf-conceit in those who can imagine that all but themselves are babies. The further we proceed, the more do we see of this want of wisdom. The whole procedure of their instruction supposes such a complete turrender of freedom of thought, of common sense, and of common caution, that it seems impossible that it should not have alarmed every fensible mind. This indeed happened before the Order was feven years old. indeed happened before the Order was leven years old. It was wile indeed to keep their Areopagitæ out of fight; but who can be fo filly as to believe that their unknown Superiors were all and always faultlefs men? But had they been the men they were reprefented to be,—If I have any knowledge of my own heart, or any capacity of drawing just inferences from the conduct of others, I am perfuaded that the knowing his Supe-riors would have animated the pupil to exertion, that he might exhibit a pleafing fpectacle to fuch intelligent and worthy judges. Did not the Stoics profefs them-felves to be encouraged in the fcheme of life, by the felves to be encouraged in the scheme of life, by the thought that the immortal Gods were looking on and passing their judgments on their manner of acting the part assigned them? But what abject spirit will be contented with working, zealoufly working, for years, after a plan of which he is never to learn the full mean-ing? In fhort, the only knowledge that he can per-ceive is knowledge in its worft form, Cunning. This must appear in the contrivances by which he will foon find that he is kept in complete subjection. If he is a true and zealous Brother, he has put himself in the power of his Superiors by his referipts, which they required of him on pretence of their learning his own character, character, and of his learning how to know the characters of other men. In these referipts they have got his thoughts on many delicate points, and on the conduct of others. His Directors may ruin him by betraying him; and this without being feen in it. I should think that wife men would know that none but weak or bad men would subject themselves to such a task. They exclude the good, the manly, the only fit perfons for affifting them in their endeavours to inform and to rule the world. Indeed I may fay that this exclusion is almost made already by connecting the Order with Free Masonry. Lodges are not the reforts of fuch men. They may fometimes be found there for an hour's relaxation. But these places are the haunts of the young, the thoughtlefs, the idle, the weak, the vain, or of defigning Literati; and accordingly this is the condition of three-fourths of the Illuminati whofe names are known to the public. I own that the reafons given to the pupil for prefcribing these tasks are artful, and well adapted to produce their effect. During the flurry of reception, and the glow of expectation, the danger may not be fuspected; but I hardly imagine that it will remain unperceived when the pupil sits down to write his first lesson. Mason Lodges, however, were the most likely places for finding and enlifting members. Young men, warmed by declamations teeming with the flimfy moral cant of Cofmo-politism, are in the proper frame of mind for this Illumination. It now appears alfo, that the diffenfions in Free Mafonry must have had great influence in promoting this fcheme of Weifhaupt's, which was, in many particulars, fo unpromifing, becaufe it presupposes fuch a degradation of the mind. But when the schismatics in Masonry disputed with warmth, trifles came to acquire unspeakable importance. The hankering after wonder was not in the leaft abated by all all the tricks which had been detected, and the impoffibility of the wifhed-for difcovery had never been demonstrated to persons prepossessed in its favour. They still chose to believe that the symbols contained some important fecret; and happy will be the man who finds it out. The more frivolous the fymbols, the more does the heart cling to the mystery; and, to a mind in this anxious state, Weishaupt's proffer was enticing. He laid before them a fcheme which was fomewhat fealible, was magnificent, furpassing our conceptions, but at the fame time fuch as permitted us to expatiate on the fubject, and even to amplify it at pleafure in our imaginations without abfurdity. It does not appear to me wonderful, therefore, that fo many were falcinated till they became at last regardless of the absurdity and inconfistency of the means by which this fplendid object was to be attained. Hear what Spartacus himfelf says of hidden mysteries. " Of " all the means I know to lead men, the most effectual is a concealed mystery. The hankering of the ۲۵ " mind is irrefiftible; and if once a man has taken it " into his head that there is a mystery in a thing, it " is impossible to get it out, either by argument or " experience. And then, we can fo change notions " by merely changing a word. What more contempti-" ble than fanaticifm; but call it enthusiasm; then add " the little word noble, and you may lead him over " the world. Nor are we, in these bright days, a bit " better than our fathers, who found the pardon of " their fins mysteriously contained in a much greater fin, viz. leaving their family, and going barefooted to Rome." در

Such being the employment, and fuch the difciples, fhould we expect the fruits to be very precious? No. The doctrines which were gradually unfolded were fuch as fuited those who continued in the Curfus Academicus.

demicus. Those who did not, because they did not like them, got a Sta bene; they were not fit for advancement. The numbers however were great; Spartacus boasted of 600 in Bavaria alone in 1783. We don't know many of them; few of those we know were in the upper ranks of life; and I can fee that it required much wheedling, and many letters of long worded German compliments from the proud Spartacus, to win even a young Baron or a Graf just come of age. Men in an eafy fituation in life could not brook the employment of a fpy, which is bafe, cowardly, and corrupting, and has in all ages and countries degraded the perfon who engages in it. Can the perfon be called wife who thus enflaves himfelf? Such perfons give up the right of private judgment, and rely on their unknown Superiors with the blindeft and molt abject confidence? For their fakes, and to rivet still faster their own fetters, they engage in the most corrupting of all employments-and for what ?- To learn fomething more of an Order, of which every degree explodes the doc-trine of a former one. Would it have hurt the young Illuminatus to have it explained to him all at once? Would not this fire his mind-when he fees with the fame glance the great object, and the fitnefs of the means for attaining it? Would not the exalted characters of the Superiors, fo much excelling himfelf in talents, and virtue, and happinefs, (otherwife the Order is good for nothing,) warm his heart, and fill him with emulation, fince he fees in them, that what is fo ftrongly preached to him is an attainable thing? No, no-it is all a trick; he must be kept like a child, amused with rattles, and stars, and ribands-and all the fatisfaction he obtains is, like the Mafons, the diverfion of feeing others running the fame gauntlet.

Weithaupt acknowledges that the great influence of the Order may be abufed. Surely, in no way fo eafily Y or or fo fatally as by corrupting or feductive leffons in the beginning. The miftake or error of the pupil is undifcoverable by himfelf, (according to the genuine principles of Illumination,) for the pupil muft believe his Mentor to be infallible—with him alone he is connected—his leffons only muft he learn. Who can tell him that he has gone wrong—or who can fet him right?

Here, therefore, there is confusion and deficiency. There must be fome standard to which appeal can be made; but this is inaccessible to all within the pale of the Order; it is therefore without this pale, and independent of the Order—and it is attainable only by abandoning the Order. The QUIBUS LICET, the PRIMO, the SOLI, can procure no light to the perfon who does not know that he has been led out of the right road to virtue and happines. The Superiors indeed draw much useful information from these reports, though they affect to stand in no need of it, and they make a cruel return.

All this is fo much out of the natural road of inftruction, that, on this account alone, we may prefume that it is wrong. We are generally fafe when we follow nature's plans. A child learns in his father's houfe, by feeing, and by imitating, and in common domeftic education, he gets much ufeful knowledge, and the chief habits which are afterwards to regulate his conduct. Example does almost every thing; and, with respect to what may be called living, as distinguissable from profession, speculation and argumentative instruction are feldom employed, or of any.ufe. The indispensableness of mutual forbearance and obedience, for domestic peace and happiness, forms most of these habits; and the child, under good parents, is kept in a fituation that makes virtue easier than vice, and and he becomes wife and good without any express ftudy about the matter.

But this Illumination plan is darknefs over all-it is too artificial-and the topics, from which counfel is to be drawn, cannot be taken from the peculiar views of the Order-for these are yet a secret for the pupiland must ever be a fecret for him while under tuition. They must therefore be drawn from common fources, and the Order is of no use; all that can naturally be effectuated by this Affociation is the forming, and affiduoufly fostering a narrow, Jewish, corporation spirit, totally opposite to the benevolent pretensions of the Order. The pupil can fee nothing but this, that there is a fet of men, whom he does not know, who may acquire incontroulable power, and may perhaps make use of him, but for what purpose, and in what way, he does not know; how can he know that his endeavours are to make man happier, any other way than as he might have known it without having put this collar round his own neck?

Thefe reflections addrefs themfelves to all men who profefs to conduct themfelves by the principles and dictates of common fenfe and prudence, and who have the ordinary fhare of candour and good-will to others. It requires no fingular fenfibility of heart, nor great generofity, to make fuch people think the doctrines and views of the Illuminati falfe, abfurd, foolifh, and ruinous. But I hope that I addrefs them to thoufands of my countrymen and friends, who have much higher notions of human nature, and who cherifh with care the affections and the hopes that are fuited to a rational, a benevolent, and a high-minded being, capable of endlefs improvement.

To those who enjoy the cheering confidence in the fuperintendance and providence of God, who confider themselves as creatures whom he has made, and whom he

he cares for, as the fubjects of his moral government, this Order must appear with every character of falsehood and abfurdity on its countenance. What c'AN BE MORE IMPROBABLE than this, that He, whom we look up to as the contriver, the maker, and director of this goodly frame of things, fhould have fo far miftaken his own plans, that this world of rational creatures should have subsisted for thousands of years, before a way could be found out, by which his intention of making men good and happy could be accomplifhed; and that this method did not occur to the great Artist himfelf, nor even to the wifest, and happiest, and best men upon earth; but to a few infignificant perfons at Munich in Bavaria, who had been trying to raife ghosts, to change lead into gold, to tell fortunes, or difcover treafures, but had failed in all their attempts; men who had been engaged for years in every whim which characterifes a weak, a greedy, or a gloomy mind? Finding all these beyond their reach, they combined their powers, and, at once, found out this infinitely more important secret-for fecret it must still be, otherwife not only the Deity, but even these philosophers, will fill be difappointed.

'Yet this is the doctrine that must be fwallowed by the Minervals and the Illuminati Minores, to whom it is not yet fafe to difclose the grand secret, that there is no fuch superintendance of Deity. At last, however, when the pupil has conceived such exalted notions of the knowledge of his teachers, and such low notions of the blundering projector of this world, it may be no difficult matter to perfuade him that all his former notions were only old wives tales. By this time he must have heard much about superstition, and how men's minds have been dazzled by this fplendid picture of a Providence and a moral government of the universe. It now appears incompatible with the great object of the the Order, the principles of universal liberty and equality—it is therefore rejected without farther examination, for this reason alone. This was precisely the argument used in France for rejecting revealed religion. It was incompatible with their Rights of Man. It is richly worth observing how this principle can

It is richly worth observing how this principle can warp the judgment, and give quite another appearance to the fame object. The reader will not be difpleafed with a most remarkable instance of it, which I beg leave to give at length.

Our immortal Newton, whom the philofophers of Europe look up to as the honour of our fpecies, whom even Mr. Bailiy, the Prefident of the National Affembly of France, and Mayor of Paris, cannot find words fufficiently energetic to praife; this patient, fagacious, and fuccelsful obferver of nature, after having exhibited to the wondering world the characteriftic property of that principle of material nature by which all the bodies of the folar fyftem are made to form a connected and permanent univerfe; and after having fhown that this law of action alone was adapted to this end, and that if gravity had deviated but one thoufandth part from the inverfe duplicate ratio of the diftances, the fyftem muft, in the courfe of a very few revolutions, have gone into confusion and ruin—he fits down, and views the goodly fcene,—and then clofes his Principles of Natural Philofophy with this reflection (his Scholium generale):

"This moft elegant frame of things could not have arifen, unlefs by the contrivance and the direction of a wife and powerful Being; and if the fixed ftars are the centres of fyftems, thefe fyftems muft be fimilar; and all thefe, conftructed according to the fame plan, are fubject to the government of one Being. All thefe he governs, not as the foul of the world, but as the Lord of all; therefore, on account of his government,

" government, he is called the Lord God-Pantekra-" tor; for God is a relative term, and refers to fubjects. " Deity is God's government, not of his own body, as " those think who confider him as the foul of the world, but of his fervants. The supreme God is a " Being eternal, infinite, absolutely perfect. But abe-" ing, however perfect, without government, is not "God; for we fay, my God, your God, the God of " Ifrael. We cannot fay my eternal, my infinite. We " may have fome notions indeed of his attributes, but " can have none of his nature. With respect to bodies, " we fee only fhapes and colour-hear only founds-" touch only furfaces. These are attributes of bodies; " but of their effence we know nothing. As a blind " man can form no notion of colours, we can form " none of the manner in which God perceives, and " understands, and influences every thing.

"Therefore we know God only by his attributes. "What are thefe? The wife and excellent contri-"vance,, ftructure, and final aim of all things. In "thefe his perfections we admire him, and we wonder. In his direction or government, we venerate and worfhip him—we worfhip him as his fervants; and God, without dominion, without providence, and final aims, is Fate—not the object either of reve-"rence, of hope, of love, or of fear.

But mark the emotions which affected the mind of another excellent obferver of Nature, the admirer of Newton, and the perfon who has put the finishing flroke to the Newtonian philosophy, by showing that the acceleration of the moon's mean motion, is the genuine refult of a gravitation decreasing in the precise duplicate ratio of the distance inversely; I mean Mr. Delaplace, one of the most brilliant ornaments of the French academy of sciences. He has lately published the Systeme du Monde, a most beautiful compend of aftromory aftronomy and of the Newtonian philosophy. Having finished his work with the same observation, " That a " gravitation inversely proportional to the squares of " the diftances was the only principle which could " unite material Nature into a permanent fystem;" be also fits down-furveys the scene-points out the parts which he had brought within our ken-and then makes this reflection: "Beheld in its totality, aftro-" nomy is the nobleft monument of the human mind, " its chief title to intelligence. But, feduced by the " illufions of fenfe, and by felf-conceit, we have long " confidered ourfelves as the centre of these motions ; " and our pride has been punished by the groundlefs " fears which we have created to ourfelves. We " imagine, forfooth, that all this is for us, and that " the stars influence our destinies ! But the labours of " ages have convinced us of our error, and we find " ourselves on an infignificant planet, almost imper-" ceptible in the immenfity of space. But the fub-" lime discoveries we have made richly repay this " humble fituation. Let us cherisch these with care, as " the delight of thinking beings-they have deftroyed " our mistakes as to our relation to the rest of the uni-" verse; errors which were the more fatal, because " the focial Order depends on justice and truth alone. " Far be from us the dangerous maxim, that it is fome-" times useful to depart from these, and to deceive " men, in order to infure their happiness; but cruel " experience has fhewn us that thefe laws are never to-" tally extinct."

There can be no doubt as to the meaning of thefe laft words—they cannot relate to aftrology—this was entirely out of date. The "attempts to deceive men, "in order to infure their happinefs," can only be those by which we are made to think too highly of ourfelves. "Inhabitants of this pepper-corn, we think "ourfelves

" ourfelves the peculiar favourites of Heaven, nay the " chief objects of care to a Being, the Maker of all,; " and then we imagine that, after this life, we are to " be happy or miferable, according as we accede or "not to this fubjugation to opinions which enflave us. " But truth and juffice have broken thefe bonds."---But where is the force of the argument which entitles this perfecter of the Newtonian philosophy to exult fo much? It all refts on this, That this earth is but as a grain of muftard-feed. Man would be more worth attention had he inhabited Jupiter or the Sun. Thus may a Frenchman look down on the noble creatures who inhabit Orolong or Pelew. But whence arifes the absurdity of the intellectual inhabitants of this peppercorn being a proper object of attention? it is because our shallow comprehensions cannot, at the fame glance, fee an extensive scene, and perceive its most minute detail.

David, a King, and a foldier, had forme notions of this kind. The heavens, it is true, pointed out to him a Maker and Ruler, which is more than they feem to have done to the Gallic philosopher; but David was afraid that he would be forgotten in the crowd, and cries out, " Lord what is man that thou art mindful of " bim?" But David gets rid of his fears, not by becoming a philosopher, and discovering all this to be abfurd,-he would still beforgotten,-he at once thinks of what he is-a noble creature-high in the fcale of nature. " But," fays he, "I had forgotten myfelf. " Thou haft made man but a little lower than the an-" gels-thou haft crowned him with glory and honour "-thou hast put all things under his feet." Here are exalted fentiments, fit for the creature whofe ken pierces through the immenfity of the vifible universe, and who fees his relation to the universe, being nearly allied to its Sovereign, and capable of rifing continually tinually in his rank, by cultivating those talents which distinguish and adorn it.

Thousands, I truft, there are, who think that this life is but a preparation for another, in which the mind of man will have the whole wonders of creation and of providence laid open to its enraptured view-where it will fee and comprehend with one glance what Newton, the most patient and fuccessful of all the observers of nature, took years of meditation to find out-where it will attain that pitch of wifdom, goodnefs, and enjoyment, of which our consciences tell us we are capable, though it far furpasses that of the wifest, the beft, and the happiest of men. Such perfons will confider this Order as degrading and deteftable, and as in direct opposition to their most confident expectations: For it pretends to what is impossible, to perfect peace and happiness in this life. They believe, and they feel, that man must be made perfect through fufferings, which shall call into action powers of mind that otherwife would never have unfolded themfelves-powers which are frequently fources of the pureft and most foothing pleafures, and naturally make us reft our eyes and hopes on that ftate where every tear shall be wiped away, and where the kind affections shall become the never-failing fources of pure and unfading delight. Such perfons fee the palpable abfurdity of a preparation which is equally neceffary for all, and yet must be confined to the minds of a few, who have the low and indelicate appetite for frivolous play-things, and for grofs fenfual pleafures. Such minds will turn away from this boafted treat with loat ing and abhorrence.

I am well aware that fome of my readers may finile at this, and think it an enthuliaftical working up of the imagination, fimilar to what I reprobate in the cafe of Utopian happines in a state of universal Liberty and Equality. It is like, they will fay, to the decla-Z mation mation in a fermion ly perfons of the trade, who are trained up to fineffe, by which they allure and tickle weak minds.

I acknowledge that in the prefent cafe I do not addrefs myfelf to the cold hearts, who contentedly

" Sink and flumber in their cells of clay;

----Peace to all fuch ;----but to the "felices anime, " quibus hac cognoscere cura ;"-to those who have enjoyed the pleasures of science, who have been success-ful-who have made discoveries-who have really illuminated the world-to the Bacons, the Newtons, the Lockes .- Allow me to mention one, Daniel Bernoulli, the most elegant mathematician, the only philosopher, and the most worthy man, of that celebrated family. He faid to a gentleman, (Dr. Staehling,) who repeated it to me, that " when reading fome of " those wonderful guesses of Sir Isaac Newton, the " fubsequent demonstration of which has been the " chief fource of fame to his most celebrated commen-" tators-his mind has fometimes been fo overpowered by thrilling emotions, that he has wifhed that ¢¢. " moment to be his last; and that it was this which " gave him the clearest conception of the happines " of heaven." If fuch delightful emotions could be excited by the perception of mere truth, what muft they be when each of these truths is an inftance of wifdom, and when we recollect, that what we call wifdom in the works of nature, is always the nice adaptation of means for producing beneficent ends; and that each of these affecting qualities is fusceptible of degrees which are boundlefs, and exceed our higheft conceptions? What can this complex emotion or feeling be but rapture ? But Bernoulli is a Doctor of Theologyand therefore a suspicious person, perhaps one of the combination combination hired by defpots to enflave us. I will take another man, a gentleman of rank and family, a foldier, who often fignalised himself as a naval commander-who at one time forced his way through a powerful fleet of the Venetians with a fmall fquadron, and brought relief to a distressed garrison. I would defire the reader to peruse the conclusion of Sir Kenhelm Digby's Treatifes on Body and Mind; and after having reflected on the ftate of fcience at the time this author wrote, let him coolly weigh the incitements to manly conduct which this foldier finds in the differences observed between body and mind; and then let him fay, on his confcience, whether they are more feeble than those which he can draw from the eternal fleep of death. If he thinks that they are-he is in the proper frame for initiation into Spartacus's higher mysteries. He may be either MAGUS or REX.

Were this a proper place for confidering the queftion as a queftion of fcience or truth, I would fay, that every man who has been a fuccefsful ftudent of nature, and who will reft his conclusions on the fame maxims of probable reafoning that have procured him fuccefs in his past refearches, will confider it as next to certain that there is another flate of existence for rational man. For he must own, that if this be not the cafe, there is a most fingular exception to a proposition which the whole courfe of his experience has made him confider as a truth founded on universal induction, viz. that nature accomplishes all her plans, and that every class of beings attains all the improvement of which it is capable. Let him but turn his thoughts inward, he will feel that his intellect is capable of improvement, in comparison with which Newton is but a child. I could purfue this argument very far, and (I think) warm the heart of every man whom I should wish to call my friend.

What

What opinion will be formed of this Affociation by the modest, the lowly-minded, the candid, who acknowledge that they too often feel the fuperior force of present and sensible pleasures, by which their minds are drawn off from the contemplation of what their confciences tell them to be right,-to be their dutiful and filial fentiments and emotions refpecting their great and good Parent-to be their dutiful and neighbourly affections, and their proper conduct to all around them -and which diminish their veneration for that purity of thought and moderation of appetite which becomes their noble natures? What must they think of this Order? Confcious of frequent faults, which would offend themselves if committed by their dearest children, they look up to their Maker with anxiety-are grieved to have fo far forgotten their duty, and fearful that they may again forget it. Their painful experience tells them that their reason is often too weak, their information too fcanty, or its light is obstructed by paffion and prejudices, which diffort and difcolour every thing; or it is unheeded during their attention to prefent objects. Happy fhould they be, if it fhould pleafe their kind Parent to remind them of their duty from time to time, or to influence their mind in any way that would compensate for their own ignorance, their own weaknefs, or even their indolence and neglect. They dare not expect fuch a favour, which their modefty tells them they do not deferve, and which they fear may be unfit to be granted; but when fuch a comfort is held out to them, with eager hearts they receive it-they blefs the kindnefs that granted it, and the hand that brings it .--- Such amiable characters have appeared in all ages, and in all fituations of mankind. They have not in all inftances been wife-often have they been precipitate, and have too readily caught at any thing which pretended to give them the fo much wifhedwifhed-for affiftances; and, unfortunately, there have been enthufiafts, or villains, who have taken advantage of this universal with of anxious man; and the world has been darkened by cheats, who have mifre-prefented God to mankind, have filled us with vain terrors, and have then quieted our fears by fines, and facrifices, and mortifications, and fervices, which they faid were more than sufficient to explate all our faults. Thus was our duty to our neighbour, to our own dig-nity, and to our Maker and Parent, kept out of fight, and religion no longer came in aid to our fenfe of right and wrong; but, on the contrary, by these fuperstitions it opened the doors of heaven to the worthlefs and the wicked .- But I with not to fpeak of thefe men, but of the good, the candid, the MODEST, the HUMBLE, who know their failings, who love their duties, but wifh to know, to perceive, and to love them ftill more. Thefe are they who think and believe that " the Gofpel has brought life and immortality to " light," that is, within their reach. They think it worthy of the Father of mankind, and they receive it with thankful hearts, admiring above all things the fimplicity of its morality, comprehended in one fen-tence, " Do to another what you can reafonably wifh " that another fhould do to you," and THAT PURITY OF THOUGHT AND MANNERS WHICH DISTINGUISHES IT FROM ALL THE SYSTEMS OF MORAL INSTRUCTION THAT HAVE EVER BEEN OFFERED TO MEN. Here they find a ground of refignation under the troubles of life, and a support in the hour of death, quite suited to the diffidence of their own character. Such men are ready to grant that the Stoics were perfons of noble and exalted minds, and that they had worthy conceptions of the rank of man in the fcale of God's works; but they confess that they themselves do not feel all that fupport from Stoical principles which man too too frequently needs; and they fay that they are not fingular in their opinions, but that the bulk of mankind are prevented, by their want of heroic fortitude, by their lituation, or their want of the opportunities of cultivating their native ftrength of mind, from ever attaining this hearty fubmifion to the will of the Deity. They maintain, that the Stoics were but a few, a very few, from among many millions'-and therefore their being fatisfied was but a trifle amidst the general difcontent, and anxiety, and defpair .- Such men will most certainly start back from this Illumination with horror and fright-from a Society which gives the lie to their fondest expectations, makes a sport of their grounds of hope, and of their deliverer; and which, after laughing at their credulity, bids them shake off all religion whatever, and denies the existence of that Supreme Mind, the pattern of all excellence, who till now had filled their thoughts with admiration and love -from an Order which pretends to free them from fpiritual bondage, and then lays on their necks a load ten times more oppreffive and intolerable, from which they have no power of ever escaping. Men of sense and virtue will fpurn at fuch a propofal; and even the profligate, who trade with Deity, must be sensible that they will be better off with their priest, whom they know, and among whom they may make a felection of fuch as will with patience and gentlenefs clear up their doubts, calm their fears, and encourage their hopes.

And all good men, all lovers of peace and of juffice, will abhor and reject the thought of overturning the prefent confliction of things, faulty as it may be, merely in the endeavour to eftablish another, which the vices of mankind may subvert again in a twelvemonth. They must fee, that in order to gain their point, the proposers have found it necessary to destroy the grounds of morality, by permitting the most wicked ed means for accomplifhing any end that our fancy, warped by paffion or intereft, may reprefent to us as of great importance. They fee, that inftead of morality, vice muft prevail, and that therefore there is no fecurity for the continuance of this Utopian felicity; and, in the mean time, defolation and mifery muft lay the world wafte during the ftruggle, and half of those for whom we are ftriving will be fwept from the face of the earth. We have but to look to France, where in eight years there have been more executions and ipoliations and diffreffes of every kind by the pouvoir revolutionnaire, than can be found in the long records of that deipotic monarchy.

There is nothing in the whole conftitution of the Illuminati that strikes me with more horror than the propofals of Hercules and Minos to enlift the women in this flocking warfare with all that " is good, and " pure, and lovely, and of good report." They could not have fallen on any expedient that will be more effectual and fatal. If any of my countrywomen shall honour these pages with a reading, I would call on them, in the most earnest manner, to confider this as an affair of the utmost importance to themselves. I would conjure them by the regard they have for their own dignity, and for their rank in fociety, to join against these enemies of human nature and profligate degraders of the sex; and I would assure them that the prefent state of things almost puts it in their power to be the faviours of the world. But if they are remifs, and yield to the feduction, they will fall from that high ftate to which they have arisen in Chrislian Europe, and again fink into that infignificancy or flavery in which the fex is found in all ages and countries out of the hearing of Christianity.

I hope that my countrywomen will confider this folemn address to them as a proof of the high efteem in which which I hold them. They will not be offended then if, in this feafon of alarm and anxiety, when I wifh to imprefs their minds with a ferious truth, I shall wave ceremony, which is always defigning, and speak of them in honess but decent plainness.

Man is immerfed in luxury. Our accommodations are now fo numerous that every thing is pleafure. Even in very fober fituations in this highly-cultivated Society, there is hardly a thing that remains in the form of a necessary of life, or even of a mere conveniencyevery thing is ornamented-it must not appear of use -it must appear as giving some sensible pleasure. I do not fay this by way of blaming-it is nature-man is a refining creature, and our most boasted acquirements are but refinements on our necessary wants. Our hut becomes a palace, our blanket a fine drefs, and our arts become fciences. This difcontent with the natural condition of things, and this difposition to refinement, is a characteristic of our species, and is the great employment of our lives. The direction which this propenfity chances to take in any age or nation, marks its character in the most confpicuous and interefting manner. All have it in fome degree, and it is very conceivable that, in fome, it may conflitute the chief object of attention. If this be the cafe in any nations, it is furely most likely to be fo in those where the accommodations of life are the most numeroustherefore in a rich and luxurious nation. I may furely, without exaggeration or reproach, give that appellation to our own nation at this moment. If you do not go to the very loweft class of people, who mult labour all day, is it not the chief object of all to procure perceptible pleasure in one way or another? The sober and bufy ftruggle in the thoughts and hopes of getting the means of enjoying the comforts of life without farther labour-and many have no other object than pleafure. Then

CHAP. II.

Then let us reflect that it is woman that is to grace the whole—It is in nature, it is the very conftitution of man, that woman, and every thing connected with woman, muft appear as the ornament of life. That this mixes with every other focial fentiment, appears from the conduct of our fpecies in all ages and in eve y fituation. This I prefume would be the cafe even though there were no qualities in the fex to juffify it. This fentiment refpecting the fex is neceffary, in order to rear fo helplefs, fo nice, and fo improveable a creature as man; without it, the long abiding tafk could not be performed :—and I think that I may venture to fay that it is performed in the different fates of fociety nearly in proportion as this preparatory and indifpenfable fentiment is in force.

On the other hand, I think it no lefs evident that it is the defire of the women to be agreeable to the men, and that they will model themfelves according to what they think will pleafe. Without this adjuftment of fentiments by nature, nothing would go on. We never obferve any fuch want of fymmetry in the works of God. If, therefore, thofe who take the lead, and give the fafhion in fociety, were wife and virtuous, I have no doubt but that the women would fet the brighteft pattern of every thing that is excellent. But if the men are nice and faftidious fenfualifts, the women will be refined and elegant voluptuaries.

There is no deficiency in the female mind, either in talents or in difpolitions; nor can we fay with certainty that there is any fubject of intellectual or moral difcuffion in which women have not excelled. If the delicacy of their conftitution, and other phyfical caufes, allow the female fex a fmaller fhare of fome mental powers, they poffefs others in a fuperior degree, which are no lefs refpectable in their own nature, an l of as great importance to fociety. Inftead of defcanting at 2 A lar, e large on their powers of mind, and fupporting my affertions by the inftances of a Hypatia, a Schurman, a Zenobia, an Elizabeth, &c. I may repeat the account given of the fex by a perfon of uncommon experience, who faw them without difguife, or any motive that could lead them to play a feigned part—Mr. Ledyard, who traverfed the greateft part of the world, for the mere indulgence of his tafte for obfervation of human nature; generally in want, and often in extreme mifery.

" I have (fays he) always remarked that women, " in all countries, are civil, obliging, tender, and hu-" mane: that they are ever inclined to be gay and " cheerful, timorous and modeft; and that they do " not hefitate, like men, to perform a kind or gene-" rous action .- Not haughty, not arrogant, not fu-" percilious, they are full of courtefy, and fond of fo-" ciety-more liable in general to err than man, but " in general, alfo, more virtuous, and performing " more good actions than he. 'To a woman, whether 66 civilized or favage, I never addreffed myfelf in the language of decency and friendship-without receiv-٢, ing a decent and friendly answer-with man it has ¢¢ " often been otherwise.

" In wandering over the barren plains of in-"hofpitable Denmark, through honeft Sweden, and "frezen Lapland, rude and churlifh Finland, unprincipled Ruffia, and the wide fpread regions of the wandering Tartar,—if hungry, dry, cold, wet, or fick, "the women have ever been friendly to me, and uniformly fo; and to add to this virtue, (fo worthy of the appellation of benevolence,) these actions have been performed in fo free and fo kind a manner, that if I was thirfty, I drank the fweetest draught, and if hungry, I ate the coarse meal with a double "relifh."

And

And thefe are they whom Weishaupt would corrupt! One of these, whom he had embraced with fondness, would he have murdered, to save his honour, and qualify himfelf to preach virtue! But let us not be too fevere on Weishaupt-let us wash ourfelves clear of all stain before we think of reprobating him. Are we not guilty in some degree, when we do not cultivate in the women those powers of mind, and those difpofitions of heart, which would equally dignify them in every flation as in those humble ranks in which Mr. Ledyard most frequently faw them? I cannot think that we do this. They are not only to grace the whole of cultivated fociety, but it is in their faithful and affectionate perfonal attachment that we are to find the fweetest pleasures that life can give. Yet in all these fituations where the manner in which they are treated is not dictated by the ftern laws of neceffity, are they not trained up for mere amusement-are not serious occupations confidered as a tafk which hurts their lovelinefs? What is this but felfishness, or as if they had no virtues worth cultivating? Their business is supposed to be the ornamenting themselves, as if nature did not dictate this to them already, with at least as much force as is necessary. Every thing is prescribed to them because it makes them more lovely-even their moral leffons are enforced by this argument, and Mifs Wool-ftoncraft is perfectly right when the fays that the fine leffons given to young women by Fordyce or Rouffeau are nothing but felfish and refined voluptuousnes. This advocate of her fex puts her fifters in the proper point of view, when she tells them that they are, like man, the fubjects of God's moral government,-like man, preparing themfelves for boundlefs improvement in a better state of existence. Had she adhered to this view of the matter, and kept it conftantly in fight, her book (which doubtlefs contains many excellent things, highly deferving

deferving of their ferious confideration) would have been a most valuable work. She justly observes, that the virtues of the fex are great and respectable, but that in our mad chace of pleafure, only pleafure, they are little thought of or attended to. Man trufts to his own uncontroulable power, or to the general goodnefs of the fex, that their virtues will appear when we have occafion for them ;--- " but we will fend for thefe fome " other time:"-Many noble difplays do they make of the most difficult attainments. Such is the patient bearing up under misfortunes, which has no brilliancy to support it in the effort. This is more difficult than braving danger in an active and confpicuous fituation. How often is a woman left with a family, and the fhattered remains of a fortune, loft perhaps by diffipation or by indolence-and how feldom, how very feldom, do we fee woman shrink from the task, or discharge it with negligence ? Is it not therefore folly next to madness, not to be careful of this our greatest bleffing-of things which fo nearly concern our peace-nor guard ourselves, and these our best companions and friends, from the effects of this fatal Illumination? It has indeed brought to light what dreadful lengths men will go, when under the fanatical and dazzling glare of happinefs in a ftate of liberty and equality, and fpurred on by infatiable luxury, and not held in check by moral feelings and the reftraints of religion-and mark, reader, that the women have here also taken the complexion of the men, and have even gone beyond them. If we have feen a fon prefent himfelf to the National Assembly of France, profeffing his fatisfaction with the execution of his father three days before, and declaring himfelf a true citizen, who prefers the nation to all other confiderations; we have also seen, on the same day, wives denouncing their husbands, and (O shocking to human nature!) mothers denouncing their fons, as bad citizens

tizens and traitors. Mark too what return the women have met with for all their horrid fervices, where, to express their fentiments of civism and abhorrence of royalty, they threw away the character of their fex, and bit the amputated limbs of their murdered countrymen*. Surely these patriotic women merited that the rights of their fex should be confidered in full council, and they were well entitled to a feat; but there is not a fingle act of their government in which the fex is confidered as having any rights whatever, or that they are things to be cared for.

Are not the accurfed fruits of Illumination to be'feen in the prefent humiliating condition of woman in France? pampered in every thing that can reduce them to the mere instruments of animal pleasure. In their present state of national moderation (as they call it) and fecurity, fee Madame Tallien come into the public theatre, accompanied by other beautiful women, (I was about to have mifnamed them Ladies,) laying afide all modefty, and prefenting themfelves to the public view, with bared limbs, à la Sauvage, as the alluring objects of defire. I make no doubt but that this is a ferious matter, encouraged, nay, prompted by government. To keep the minds of the Parifians in the prefent fever of diffolute gaiety, they are at more expence from the national treasury for the support of the fixty theatres, than all the penfions and honorary offices in Britain, three times told, amount to. Was not their abominable farce in the church of Notre Dame a bate of, the fame kind in the true spirit of Weishaupt's Eroterion? « We

Orleans, the first prince of the blood, did not foruple to profitute his daughter, if not to the embraces, yet to the wanton view of the public, with the precife intention of inflaming their defires. (See the account given of the dinners at Sillery's, by Camille Defmoulines, in his fpeech against the Briffotins.) But what will be the end of all this? The fondlings of the wealthy will be pampered in all the indulgences which fastidious voluptuousness; but they will either be flighted as toys, or they will be immured; and the companions of the poor will be drudges and flaves.

I am fully perfuaded that it was the enthufiaftic admiration of Grecian democracy that recommended to the French nation the drefs à la Grecque, which exhibits not the elegant, ornamented beauty, but the alluring female, fully as well as Madame Tallien's drefs à la Sauvage. It was no doubt with the fame adherence to serious principle, that Mademoiselle Therouanne was most beautifully dressed à l'Amazonne on the 5th of October 1789, when she turned the heads of so many young officers of the regiments at Verfailles. The Cythera, the bominum divunque voluptas, at the cathedral of Notre Dame, was also dreffed à la Grecque: There is a most evident and characteristic change in the whole fystem of female drefs in France. The Filles de l'Opera always gave the ton, and were furely withheld by no rigid principle. They fometimes produced very extravagant and fantastic forms, but these were almoft almost always in the style of the highest ornament, and they trufted, for the reft of the impression which they wifhed to make, to the fascinating expression of elegant movements. This indeed was wonderful, and hardly conceivable by any who have not feen a grand ballet performed by good actors. I have shed tears of the most fincere and tender forrow during the exhibition of Antigone, set to music by Traëtta, and performed by Madame Meilcour and Sre Torelli, and Zantini. I can eafily conceive the impression to be still stronger, though perhaps of another kind, when the former fuperb dreffes are changed for the expressive simplicity of the Grecian. I cannot help thinking that the female ornaments in the reft of Europe, and even among ourfelves, have less elegance fince we lost the fanction of the French court. But fee how all this will terminate. when we shall have brought the fex to low, and will not even wait for a Mahometan paradife. What can we expect but fuch a diffoluteness of manners, that the endearing ties of relation and family, and mutual confidence within doors, will be flighted, and will ceafe; and every man must stand up for himself, fingle and alone?

Fæcunda culpæ fæcula nuptias Primum inquinavêre, et genus, et domos. Hoc fonte derivata clades In patriam populumque fluxit. Hor. iii. 6. 17.

This is not the fuggestion of prudish fear, I think it is the natural course of things, and that France is at this moment giving to the world the fullest proof of Weishaupt's fagacity, and the judgment with which he has formed his plans. Can it tend to the improvement of our morals or manners to have our ladies frequent the gymnastic theatres, and see them decide, like the Roman Roman matrons, on the merits of a naked gladiator or wrestler? Have we not enough of this already with our vaulters and pofture-mafters, and should we admire any lady who had a rage for fuch spectacles? Will it improve our taste to have our rooms ornamented with fuch paintings and sculptures as filled the cenaculum, and the study of the refined and elegant moralist Horace, who had the art-ridendo divere verum? Shall we be improved when fuch indulgences are thought compatible with fuch leffons as he generally gives for the conduct of life? The pure Morality of Illuminatifm is now employed in ftripping Italy of all those precious remains of ancient art and voluptuoufnefs; and Paris will ere long be the deposit and the refort of artifts from all nations, there to fludy the works of ancient masters, and to return from thence panders of public corruption. The plan is masterly, and the lowborn Statefmen and Generals of France may in this refpect be fet on a level with a Colbert or a Condé. But the confequences of this Gallic dominion over the minds of fallen man will be as dreadful as their dominion over their lives and fortunes.

Recollect in what manner Spartacus propofed to corrupt his fifters (for we need not fpeak of the manner in which he expected that this would promote his plan —this is abundantly plain). It was by deftroying their moral fentiments, and their fentiments of religion. Recollect what is the recommendation that the Atheift Minos gives of his ftep-daughters, when he fpeaks of them, as proper perfons for the Lodge of Sitters. "They have got over all prejudices, and, in matters "of religion they think as I do." Thefe profligates judged rightly that this affair required much caution, and that the utmost attention to decency, and even delicacy, must be observed in their rituals and ceremonies, otherwise the women would be difgusted. This was

was judging fairly of the feelings of a female mind. But they judged falfely, and only according to their own coarfe experience, when they attributed their dif-gust and their fears to coyness. Coyness is indeed the instinctive attribute of the female. In woman it is very great, and it is perhaps the genuine fource of the difgust of which the Illuminati were fuspicious. But they have been dim-fighted indeed, or very unfortunate in their acquaintance, if they never observed any other source of repugnance in the mind of woman to what is immoral or immodest-if they did not see dislike-moral difapprobation. Do they mean to infinuate, that in that regard which modeft women express in all their words and actions, for what every one understands by the terms decency, modefty, and the difapprobation of every thing that violates those feelings, the women only show female coyness? Then are they very blind instructors. But they are not fo blind. The account given of the initiation of a young Sifter at Frankfort, under the feigned name Pfycharion, fhows the most fcrupulous attention to the moral feelings of the fex; and the confusion and disturbance which, after all their care, it occafioned among the ladies, fhows, that when they thought all right and delicate, they had been but coarse judges. Minos damns the ladies there, because they are too free, too rich, too republican, and too wife, for being led about by the nofe (this is his own expression). But Philo certainly thought more cor-rectly of the fex in general, when he fays, Truth is a modest girl: She may be handed about like a lady; by good fense and good manners, but must not be bullied and driven about like a strumpet. I would here infert the difcourfes or addreffes which were made on that occafion to the different classes of the assembly, girls, young ladies, wives, young men, and ftrangers, which * 2 B are are are really ingenious and well composed, were they not fuch as would offend my fair countrywomen.

The religious fentiments by which mortals are to be affisted, even in the discharge of their moral duties, and still more, the sentiments which are purely religious, and have no reference to any thing here, are precifely those which are most easily excited in the mind of woman. Affection, admiration, filial reverence, are, if I miltake not exceedingly, those in which the women far furpafs the men; and it is on, this account that we generally find them fo much difposed to devotion, which is nothing but a fort of fond indulgence of those affections without limit to the imagination. The enraptured devotee pours out her foul in expressions of these feelings, just as a fond mother mixes the careffes given to her child with the most extravagant expressions of love. The devotee even endeavours to excite higher degrees of these affections, by expatiating on fuch circumstances in the divine conduct with respect to man as naturally awaken them; and he does this without any fear of exceeding; because Infinite Wisdom and Goodness will always justify the fentiment, and free the expression of it from all charge of hyperbole or extravagance.

I am convinced, therefore, that the female mind is well adapted to cultivation by means of religion, and that their native foftnefs and kindnefs of heart will always be fufficient for procuring it a favourable reception from them. It is therefore with double regret that I fee any of them join in the arrogant pretenfions of our Illuminated philofophers, who fee no need of fuch affiftances for the knowledge and difcharge of their duties. There is nothing fo unlike that general modefty of thought, and that diffidence, which we are difpofed to think the character of the female mind. I am inclined to think, that fuch deviations from the general conduct of the fex are marks of a harfher character, of a heart that has lefs fenfibility, and is on the whole lefs amiable than that of others. Yet it mult be owned that there are fome fuch among us. Much, if not the whole of this perverfion, has, I am perfuaded, been owing to the contagion of bad example in the men. They are made familiar with fuch expreffions—their firft horror is gone, and (would to heaven that I were miftaken!) fome of them have already wounded their confciences to fuch a degree, that they have fome reafon to with that religion may be without foundation.

But I would call upon all, and thefe women in particular, to confider this matter in another light-as it may affect themselves in this life; as it may affect their rank and treatment in ordinary fociety. I would fay to them, that if the world shall once adopt the belief that this life is our all, then the true maxim of rational conduct will be, to "eat and to drink, fince to-moi-" row we are to die;" and that when they have nothing to truft to but the fondness of the men, they will foon find themselves reduced to flavery. The crown which they now wear will fall from their heads, and they will no longer be the arbiters of what is lovely in human life. The empire of beauty is but fhort; and even in republican France, it will not be many years that Madame Tallien can fascinate the Parifian Theatre by the exhibition of her charms. Man is faftidious and changeable, he is the ftronger animal, and can always take his own will with refpect to w man. At prefent he is with-held by respect for her moral worth-and many are with-held by religion-and many more are with-held by public laws, which laws were framed at a time when religious truths influenced the the minds and the conduct of men. When the fentiments of men change, they will not be fo foolifh as to keep in force laws which cramp their ftrongeft defires. Then will the rich have their Harems, and the poor their drudges.

Nay, it is not merely the circumstance of woman's being confidered as the moral companion of man that gives the fex its empire among us. There is fome-thing of this to be observed in all nations. Of all the diftinctions which fet our species above the other fentient inhabitants of this globe, making us as unlike to the best of them as they are to a piece of inanimate matter, there is none more remarkable than the differences observable in the appearances of those defires by which the race is continued. As I observed already, fuch a diffinction is indifpenfably necessary. There must be a moral connection, in order that the human fpecies may be a race of rational creatures, improveable, not only by the increasing experience of the individual, but also by the heritable experience of the fuccefiive generations. It may be observed between the folitary pairs in Labrador, where human nature starves, like the stunted oak in the crevice of a baron rock; and it is feen in the cultivated focieties of Europe, where our nature in a feries of ages becomes a majestic tree. Whatever may be the native powers of mind in the poor but gentle Esquimaux, she can do nothing for the species but nurse a young one, who cannot run his race of life without inceffant and hard labour to keep foul and body together-here therefore her ftation in fociety can hardly have a name, becaufe there can hardly be faid to be any affociation, except what is neceffary for repelling the hoftile attacks of Indians, who feem to hunt them without provocation as the dog does the hare. In other parts of the world, we

we fee that the confideration in which the fex is held, nearly follows the proportions of that aggregate of many different particulars, which we confider as conftituting the cultivation of a fociety. We may perhaps err, and we probably do err, in our eftimation of those degrees, because we are not perfectly acquainted with what is the real excellence of man. But as far as we can judge of it, I believe that my affertion is acknowledged. On this authority, I might prefume to fay, that it is in Christian Europe that man has attained his higheft degree of cultivation-and it is undoubtedly here that the women have attained the higheft rank. I may even add, that it is in that part of Europe where the effential and diftinguishing doctrines of Christian morality are most generally acknowledged and attended to by the laws of the country, that woman acts the higheft part in general society. But here we must be very careful how we form our notion, either of the fociety, or of the female rank-it is furely not from the two or three dozens who fill the higheft ranks in the ftate. Their number is too fmall, and their fituation is too particular, to afford the proper average. Besides, the situation of the individuals of this class in all countries is very much the fame-and in all it is very artificial—accordingly their character is fantasti-cal. Nor are we to take it from that class that is the most numerous of all, the lowest class of fociety, for thefe are the labouring poor, whose conduct and occupations are fo much dictated to them by the hard circumftances of their fituation, that fearcely any thing is left to their choice. The fituation of women of this class must be nearly the same in all nations. But this class is still susceptible of some variety-and we fee it -and I think that even here there is a perceptible fuperiority of the female rank in those countries where the

the purest Christianity prevails.' We must however take our measures or proportions from a numerous class, but also a class in somewhat of easy circumftances, where moral fentiments call fome attention, and perfons have fome choice in their conduct. And here, although I cannot pretend to have had many opportunities of obfervation, yet I have had fome. I can venture to fay that it is not in Russia, nor in Spain, that woman is, on the whole, the most important as a member of the community. I would fay, that in Britain her important rights are more generally respected than any where else. No where is a man's character to much hurt by conjugal infidelity-no where is it fo difficult to rub off the stigma of baftardy, or to procure a decent reception of foci-ciety for an improper connection; and I believe it will readily be granted, that the fhare of the women in fucceffions, their authority in all matters of domeftic truft, and even their opinions in what concerns life and manners, are fully more refpected here than in any country.

I have long been of the opinion, (and every obfervation that I have been able to make fince I first formed it confirms me in it,) that woman is indebted to Christianity alone for the high rank she holds in fociety. Look into the writings of antiquity—into the works of the Greek and Latin poets—into the numberless panegyrics of the fex, to be found both in profe and verse—I can find little, very little indeed, where woman is treated with respect—there is no want of love, that is, of fondness, of beauty, of charms, of graces. But of woman as the equal of man, as a moral companion, travelling with him the road to felicity—as his adviser—his folace in misfortune—as a pattern from which he may fometimes copy with advantage;—of all this there is hardly a trace. Woman is always mentioned as an object of paffion. Chaftity, modefty, fober-mindednefs, are all confidered in relation to this fingle point; or fometimes as of importance in respect of economy or domeftic quiet. Recollect the famous speech of Meteltellus Numidicus to the Roman people, when, as, Cenfor, he was recommending marriage.

" Si fine uxore poffemus Quirites effe, omnes eâ "moleftiâ careremus. Sed quoniam ita natura tradidit, ut nec cum illis commodè, nec fine illis ullo "modo vivi poffet, faluti perpetuæ potius quam brevi "voluptati confulendum."

Aul. Gell. Noct. Att. I. 6.

What does Ovid, the great panegyrift of the fex, fay for his beloved daughter, whom he had praifed for her attractions in various places of his Triftia and other compositions? He is writing her Epitaph-and the only thing he can fay of her as a rational creature is, that fhe was-Domifida-not a Gadabout.-Search Apuleius, where you will find many female characters in abstracto-You will find that his little Photis (a cook-maid and ftrumpet) was nearest to his heart, af-ter all his philosophy. Nay, in his pretty story of Cupid and Pfyche, which the very wife will tell you is a fine leffon of moral philosophy, and a representation of the operations of the intellectual and moral faculties of the human foul, a story which gave him the finest opportunity, nay, almost made it necessary for him to infert whatever can ornament the female character; what is his Pfyche but a beautiful, fond, and filly girl; and what are the whole fruits of any acquaintance with the fex ?-Pleafure. But why take more pains in the fearch?-Look at their immortal goddeffes--- goddeffes—is there one among them whom a wife man would felect for a wife or a friend ?—I grant that a Lucretia is praifed—a Portia, an Arria, a Zenobia but thefe are individual characters—not reprefentatives of the fex. The only Grecian ladies who made a figure by intellectual talents, were your Afpafias, Sapphos, Phrynes, and other nymphs of this caft, who had emerged from the general infignificance of the fex, by throwing away what we are accuftomed to call its greateft ornament.

I think that the first piece in which woman is pictured as a refpectable character, is the oldeft novel that I am acquainted with, written by a Chriftian Bi-fhop, Heliodorus—I mean the Adventures of Thea-genes and Chariclea. I think that the Heroine is a greater character than you will meet with in all the annals of antiquity. And it is worth while to observe what was the effect of this painting. The poor Bi-shop had been deposed, and even excommunicated, for doctrinal errors, and for drawing fuch a picture of a heathen. The magistrates of Antioch, the most voluptuous and corrupted city of the East, wrote to the Emperor, telling him that this book had reformed the ladies of their city, where Julian the Emperor and his Sophifts had formerly preached in vain, and they therefore prayed that the good Bishop might not be deprived of his mitre.—It is true, we read of Hypatia, daughter of Theon, the mathematician at Alexandria, who was a prodigy of excellence, and taught philoso-phy, i. c. the art of leading a good and happy life, with great applause in the famous Alexandrian school.— But she also was in the times of Christianity, and was the intimate friend of Syncellus and other Christian Bishops.

It

GHAP. II.

It is undoubtedly Chriftianity that has fet woman on her throne, making her in every refpect the equal of man, bound to the fame duties, and candidate for the fame happines. Mark how woman is described by a Chriftian poet,

"" Yet when I approach Her lovelinefs, fo abfolute fhe feems, And in herfelf complete, fo well to know Her own, that what fhe wills to do or fay Seems wifeft, virtuoufeft, difcreeteft, beft.

Neither her outfide, form'd fo fair, So much delights me, as those graceful acts, Those thousand decencies that daily flow From all her words and actions, mix'd with love And fweet compliance, which declare unfeign'd Union of mind, or in us both one soul.

MILTON.

This is really moral painting, without any abatement of female charms.

This is the natural confequence of that purity of heart, which is fo much infifted on in the Chriftian morality. In the inftructions of the heathen philofophers, it is either not mentioned at all, or at most, it is recommended coldly, as a thing proper, and worthy of a mind attentive to great things.—But, in Chriftianity, it is infifted on as an indifpensable duty, and enforced by many arguments peculiar to itself.

It is worthy of obfervation, that the most prominent fuperstitions which have disconverted the Christian churches, have been the excessive refinements which * 2 C the the enthufiaftic admiration of heroic purity has allowed the holy trade to introduce into the manufacture of our spiritual setters. Without this enthusiasm, cold expediency would not have been able to make the Monaftic vow fo general, nor have given us fuch numbers of convents. These were generally founded by fuch enthusiasts—the rulers indeed of the church encouraged this to the utmost, as the best levy for the spiritual power-but they could not enjoin fuch foundations. From the fame fource we may derive the chief influence of auricular confession. When these were firmly established, and were venerated, almost all the other corruptions of Christianity followed of course. I may almost add, that though it is here that Christianity has Suffered the most violent attacks, it is here that the place is most tenable .--- Nothing tends fo much to knit all the ties of fociety as the endearing connections of family, and whatever tends to leffen our veneration for the marriage-contract, weakens them in the most effectual manner. Purity of manners is the most effectual fupport, and pure thoughts are the only fources from which pure manners can flow. I readily grant that in former times this veneration for perfonal purity was carried to an extravagant height, and that feveral very ridiculous fancies and cuftoms arole from this. Romantic love and chivalry are ftrong inftances of the ftrange vagaries of our imagination, when carried along by this enthusiaftic admiration of female purity; and fo unnatural and forced, that they could only be temporary fashions. But I believe that, with all their ridicule, it would be a happy nation where this was the general creed and practice. Nor can I help thinking a nation on its decline, when the domeftic connections ceafe to be venerated, and the illegitimate offspring of a nabob or a nobleman are received with eafe into good company.

Nothing

Nothing is more clear than that the defign of the Illuminati was to abolifh Chriftianity—and we now fee how effectual this would be for the corruption of the fair fex, a purpofe which they eagerly wifhed to gain, that they might corrupt the men. But if the women would retain the rank they now hold, they will be careful to preferve in full force on their minds this religion, fo congenial to their difpofitions, which nature has made affectionate and kind.

And with refpect to the men, is it not egregious folly to encourage any thing that can tend to blaft our fweeteft enjoyments? Shall we not do this most effectually if we attempt to corrupt what nature will always make us confider as the higheft elegance of life? The divinity of the Stoics was, "Mens fana in corpore fano," —but it is equally true,

" Gratior est pulchro veniens e corpore virtus."

If, therefore, inftead of profeffedly tainting what is of itfelf beautiful, we could really work it up to

" That fair form, which, wove in fancy's loom, " Floats in light visions round the poet's head,"

• and make woman a pattern of perfection, we fhould undoubtedly add more to the heartfelt happiness of life than by all the discoveries of the Illuminati. See what was the effect of Theagenes and Chariclea.

And we should remember that with the fate of woman that of man is indiffolubly knit. The voice of nature spoke through our immortal bard, when he made Adam fay,

"Mine never shall be parted, blifs or woe."

Should

The German Union.

WHEN fuch a fermentation had been excited in the public mind, it cannot be fuppofed that the formal suppression of the Order of the Illuminati in Bavaria, and in the Duchy of Wirtemberg, by the reigning princes, would bring all to reft again. By no means. The minds of men were predifpofed for a change by the reftlefs fpirit of fpeculation in every kind of enquiry, and the leaven had been carefully and skilfully diffeminated in every quarter of the empire, and even in foreign countries. Weifhaupt faid, on good grounds, that " if the Order fhould be difcovered and fuppreffed, he would reftore it with tenfold energy in a twelvemonth." Even in those ftates where it was formally abolished, nothing could hinder the enlifting new members, and carrying on all the purposes of the Order. The Areopagitæ might indeed be changed, and the feat of the direction transferred to fome other place, but the Minerval and his Mentor could meet as formerly, and a ride of a few miles into another State, would bring him to a Lodge, where the young would be amufed, and the more advanced would be engaged in ferious mischief. Weishaupt never liked children's play. He indulged Philo in it, becaufe he faw him taken with fuch rattles: but his own projects were dark and folemn, and it was a relief to him now to be freed from that mummery. He foon found the bent of the perfon's mind on whom he had fet his talons, and, he fays, that "no man ever escaped him whom he thought it worth while to fecure." He had already filled the lifts with enough 2 B of of the young and gay, and when the prefent condition of the Order required fly and experienced heads, he no longer courted them by play-things. He communicated the ranks and the inftructions by a letter, without any ceremony. The correspondence with Philo at the time of the breach with him, fhews the fuperiority of Spartacus. Philo is in a rage, provoked to find a pitiful professor discontented with the immense fervices which he had received from a gentleman of his rank, and treating him with authority, and with difingenuity.-He tells Spartacus what ftill greater fervices he can do the Order, and that he can alfo ruin it with a breath.-But in the midft of this rage, he propofes a thoufand modes of reconcilement. The finallest concession would make him hug Spartacus in his arms. But Spartacus is deaf to all his threats, and firm as a rock. Though he is confcious of his own vile conduct, he abates not in the fmallest point, his absolute authority-requires the most implicit submission, which he fays " is due not to him, but to the Order, and without which the Order must immediately go to ruin."-He does not even deign to challenge Philo to do his worft, but allows him to go out of the Order without one angry word. This fhows his confidence in the energy of that fpirit of reftlefs difcontent, and that hankering after reform which he had fo fuccefsfully fpread abroad.

This had indeed arifen to an unparalleled height, unexpected even by the feditious themfelves. This appeared in a remarkable manner by the reception given to the infamous letters on the confliction of the Pruffian States.

The general opinion was, that Mirabeau was the author of the letters themfelves, and it was perfectly underflood by every perfon, that the tranflation into French was a joint contrivance of Mirabeau and Nicholai. cholai. I was affured of this by the British Minister at that Court. There are fome blunders in refpect of names, which an inhabitant of the country could hardly be guilty of, but are very confistent with the felf-conceit and precipitancy of this Frenchman — There are feveral inftances of the fame kind in two pieces, which are known for certain to be his, viz. the Gbronique fcandaleufe and the Histoire fecrette de la Cour de Berlin. These letters were in every hand, and were mentioned in every conversation, even in the Pruffian dominions—and in other places of the empire they were quoted, and praifed, and commented on, although fome of their contents were nothing fhort of rebellion.

Mirabeau had a large portion of that felf-conceit which diftinguishes his countrymen. He thought himfelf qualified not only for any high office in ad-ministration, but even for managing the whole affairs of the new King. He therefore endeavoured to obtain fome post of honour. But he was difap-pointed, and, in revenge, did every thing in his power to make those in administration the objects of public ridicule and reproach. His licentious and profligate manners were fuch as excluded him from the fociety of the people of the first classes, whom it behoved to pay fome attention to perfonal dignity. His opinions were in the higheft degree corrupted, and he openly profeffed Atheifm. This made him peculiarly obnoxious to the King, who was determined to correct the diffurbances and difquiets which had arifen in the Pruffian flates from the indifference of his predeceffor in those matters. Mirabeau therefore attached himfelf to a junto of writers and fcribblers, who had united in order to diffeminate licentious principles, both in refpect of re-ligion and of government. His wit and fancy were great, and he had not perhaps his equal for eloquent and and biting fatire. He was therefore careffed by those writers as a most valuable acquisition to their Society. He took all this deference as his just due; and was fo confident in his powers, and fo foolifh, as to advise, and even to admonish, the King. Highly obnoxious by fuch conduct, he was excluded from any chance of preferment, and was exceedingly out of humour. In this state of mind he was in a fit frame for Illumination. Spartacus had been eyeing him for fome time, and at last communicated this honour to him through the intermedium of Mauvillon, another Frenchman, Lieutenant-Colonel in the fervice of the Duke of Brunswick. This perfon had been most active during the formal existence of the Order, and had contributed much to its reception in the Protestant states-he remained long con-Indeed his Illumination was not known till cealed. the invation of Holland by the French. Mauvillon then stepped forth, avowed his principles, and recommended the example of the French to the Germans. This encouragement brought even Philo again on the flage, notwithflanding his refentment against Spartacus, and his solemn declaration of having abjured all fuch focieties .- Thefe, and a thoufand fuch facts, flow that the feeds of licentious Cofmopolitifm had taken deep root, and that cutting down the crop had by no means deftroyed the baneful plant.-But this is not all-a new method of cultivation had been invented, and immediately adopted, and it was now growing over all Europe in another form.

I have already taken notice of the general perverfion of the public mind which co-operated with the fchifms of Free Mafonry in procuring a liftening ear to Spartacus and his affociates. It will not be doubted but that the machinations of the Illuminati increafed this, even among those who did not enter into Into the Order. It was easier to diminsh the respect for civil establishments in Germany than in almost any other country. The frivolity of the ranks and court-offices in the different confederated petty flates made it impossible to combine dignity with the habits of a fcanty income.-It was still easier to expose to ridicule and reproach those numberless abuses which the folly and the vices of men had introduced into religion. The influence on the public mind which naturally attaches to the venerable office of a moral instructor, was prodigiously diminished by the continual difputes of the Catholics and Protestants, which were carried on with great heat in every little principality. The freedom of enquiry, which was supported by the state in Protestant Germany, was terribly abused, (for what will the folly of man not abuse?) and degenerated into a wanton licentiousnefs of thought, and a rage for fpeculation and fcepticism on every fubject whatever. The struggle, which was originally between the Catholics and the Protestants, had changed, during the gradual progrefs of luxury and immorality, into a contest between reason and superstition. And in this contest the denomination of fuperstition had been gradually extended to every doctrine which professed to be of divine revelation, and reason was declared to be, for certain, the only way in which the Deity can inform the human mind.

Some refpectable Catholics had published works filled with liberal fentiments. These were reprefented as villainous machinations to inveigle Proteftants. On the other hand, some Protestant divines had proposed to imitate this liberality by making concessions which might enable a good Catholic to live more at ease among the Protestants, and might even accelerate an union of faiths. This was hooted beyond measure, as Jesuitical, and big with danger. While

CHAP. 111.

While the fceptical junto, headed by the editors of the Deutsche Bibliothek and the Berlin Monatschrift, were recommending every performance that was hoftile to the established faith of the country, Leuchtfenring was equally bufy, finding Jefuits in every corner, and went about with all the inquietude of a madman, picking up anecdotes. Zimmerman, the refpectable phyfician of Frederick King of Pruffia, gives a diverting account of a vifit which he had from Leuchtfenring at Hanover, all trembling with fears of Jefuits, and withing to perfuade him that his life was in danger from them. Nicholai was now on the hunt, and during this crufade Philo laid hands on him, being introduced to his acquaintance by Leuchtfenring, who was, by this time, cured of his zeal for Proteflanifm, and had become a difciple of Illuminatifm. Philo had gained his good opinion by the violent attack which he had published on the Jesuits and Rofycrucians by the orders of Spartacus.-He had not far to go in gaining over Nicholai, who was at this time making a tour through the Lodges. The fparks of Illumination which he perceived in many of them pleafed him exceedingly, and he very cheerfully received the precious fecret from Philo.

This acquifition to the Order was made in January 1782. Spartacus was delighted with it, confidered Nicholai as a most excellent champion, and gave him the name of Lucian, the great fcoffer at all religion, as aptly expressing his character.

Nicholai, on his return to Berlin, published many volumes of his difcoveries. One would imagine that not a Jefuit had escaped him. He mentions many strange schifmatics, both in religion and in Masonry-But he never once mentions an Illuminatus.—When they were first checked, and before the discovery of the secret correspondence, he defended them, and strongly reprobated the proceedings of the Elector Elector of Bavaria, calling it vile perfecution.— Nay, after the difcovery of the letters found in Zwack's houfe, he perfifted in his defence, vindicated the poffeffion of the abominable receipts, and highly extolled the character of Weifhaupt.—But when the difcovery of papers in the houfe of Batz informed the public that he himfelf had long been an Illuminatus, he was fadly put to it to reconcile his defence with any pretensions to religion*.—— Weifhaupt faved him from difgrace, as he thought, by his publication of the fystem of Illuminatifm— Nicholai then boldly faid that he knew no more of the Order than was contained in that book, that is, only the two first degrees.

But before this, Nicholai had made to himfelf a most formidable enemy. The history of this contest is curious in itself, and gives us a very instructive picture of the machinations of that conjuration des philosophes, or gang of fcribblers who were leagued against the peace of the world. The reader will therefore find it to our purpose. On the authority of a lady in Courland, a Countels von der Recke, Nicholai had accused Dr. Stark of Darmstadt (who made such a figure in Free Masonry) of Jesutism, and of having even submitted to the tonfure. Stark was a most result for the formany, Illuminatism excepted, and had ferreted out many of Nicholai's hidden transac-

* He impudently pretended that the papers containing the fyftem and doctrines of Illuminatifm, came to him at Berlin, from an unknown hand. But no one believed him—it was inconfiftent with what is faid of him in the fecret correspondence. He had faid the fame thing concerning the French translation of the Letters on the Constitution of the Prussian States. Fifty copies were found in his ware-house. He faid that they had been fent from Strafburg, and that he had never fold one of them.—Supposing both these affertions to be true, it appears that Nicholai was considered as a very proper hand for difpersing such poison.

tions. He was alfo an unwearied book-maker, and dealt out thefe difcoveries by degrees, keeping the eye of the public continually upon Nicholai. He had fufpected his Illumination for fome time paft, and when the fecret came out, by Spartacus' letter, where he boatts of his acquifition, calling Nicholai a most flurdy combatant, and faying that he was contentiffimus, Stark left no ftone unturned till he difcovered that Nicholai had been initiated in all the horrid and most profligate mysteries of Illuminatifm; and that Spartacus had at the very first entrusted him with his most darling fecrets, and advifed with him on many occasions*.

This complete blafting of his moral character could not be patiently borne, and Nicholai was in his turn the bitter enemy of Stark, and, in the pa-

* Of this we have complete proof in the private correspondence. Philo, speaking in one of his letters of the gradual change which was to be produced in the minds of their pupils from Chriftianity to Deism, fays, "Nicholai informs me, that even the pious " Zollikofer has now been convinced that it would be proper to fet " up a deiftical church in Berlin." It is in vain that Nicholai fays that his knowledge of the Order was only of what Weishaupt had published; for Philo fays that that corrected fystem had not been introduced into it when he quitted it in 1784. But Nicholai deferves no credit-he is one of the most fcandalous examples of the operation of the principles of Weishaupt. He procured admiffion into the Lodges of Free Malons and Rolycrucians, merely to act the difhonourable part of a fpy, and he betrayed their fecrets as far as he could. In the appendix to the 7th volume of his journey, he declaims against the Templar Masons, Rosycrucians, and Jesuits, for their blind submission to unknown superiors, for their fuperstitions, their priesthoods, and their base principles-and yet had been five years in a fociety in which all these were carried to the greatest height. He remains true to the Illuminati alone, because they had the fame object in view with himself and his atheiltical affociates, His defence of Protestantism is all a cheat; and perhaps he may be confidered as an enemy equally formidable with Weithaupt himfelf. This is the reason why he occupies fo many of these pages.

roxyfms of his anger, published every idle tale, although he was often obliged to contradict them in the next Review. In the course of this attack and defence, Dr. Stark discovered the revival of the Illuminati, or at least a fociety which carried on the fame great work in a fomewhat different way.

Dr. Stark had written a defence against one of Nicholai's accufations, and wished to have it printed at Leipzig. He therefore fent the manufcript to a friend, who refided there. This friend immediately proposed it to a most improper person, Mr. Pott, who had written an anonymous commentary on the King of Pruffia's edict for the uniformity of religious worlhip in his dominions. This is one of the most shameless attacks on the established faith of the nation, and the authority and conduct of the Prince, that can be imagined. Stark's friend was ignorant of this, and fpoke to Pott, as the partner of the great publisher Walther. They, without hesitation, undertook the publishing; but when fix weeks had paffed over, Stark's friend found that it was not begun. Some exceptionable paffages, which treated with difrespect the religion of Reason, were given as the caufe of delay; and he was told that the author had been written to about them, but had not yet returned an answer. This was afterwards found to be falfe. Then a passage in the preface was objected to, as treating roughly a lady in Courland, which Walther could not print, because he had connections with that court. The author must be entreated to change his expressions. After another delay, paper was wanting. The MS. was withdrawn. Walther now faid that he would print it immediately, and again got it into his hands, promifing to fend the fheets as they came from the prefs. These not appearing for a long time, the agent made enquiry, and found that it was fent to Michaelis at Halle, to be.

be printed there. The agent immediately went thither, and found that it was printing with great alterations, another title, and a guide or key, in which the work was perverted and turned into ridicule by a Dr. Babrdt, who refided in that neighbourhood. An action of recovery and damages was immediately commenced at Leipzig, and after much conteft, an interdict was put on Michaelis's edition, and a proper edition was ordered immediately from Walther, with fecuritty that it fhould appear before Bahrdt's key. Yet when it was produced at the next fair, the bookfellers had been already fupplied with the fpurious edition; and as this was accompanied by the key, it was much more faleable ware, and completely fupplanted the other.

This is furely a ftrong inftance of the machinations by which the Illuminati have attempted to deftroy the Liberty of the Prefs, and the power they have to difcourage or fuppress any thing that is not agreeable to the tafte of the literary junto. It was in the course of this transaction that Dr. Stark's agent found people talking in the coffeehouses of Leipzig and Halle of the advantages of public libraries, and of libraries by fubscription, in every town, where perfons could, at a fmall expence, fee what was paffing in the learned world. As he could not but acquiefce in these points, they who held this language began to talk of a general Aflociation, which fhould act in concert over all Germany, and make a full communication of its numerous literary productions by forming focieties for reading and instruction, which should be regularly fupplied with every publication. Flying fheets and pamphlets were afterwards put into his hands, stating the great use of such an Association, and the effect which it would fpeedily produce by enlightening the nation. By and by he learned learned that fuch an Affociation did really exift, and that it was called the GERMAN UNION, for ROOTING OUT SUPERSTITION AND PREJUDICES, AND ADVANCING TRUE CHRISTIANITY. On enquiry, however, he found that this was to be a Secret Society, becaufe it had to combat prejudices which were fupported by the great of this world, and becaufe its aim was to promote that general information which priefts and defpots dreaded above all things. This Affociation was acceffible only through the reading focieties, and oaths of fecrecy and fidelity were required. In fhort, it apppeared to be the old fong of the Illuminati.

This difcovery was immediately announced to the public, in an anonymous publication in defence of Dr. Stark. It is supposed to be his own per-formance. It discloses a scene of complicated villiany and folly; in which the Lady in Courland makes a very strange figure. She appears to be a wild fanatic, deeply engaged in magic and ghost-raising, and leagued with Nicholai, Gedicke, and Biester, against Dr. Stark. He is very completely cleared of the facts alledged against him; and his three male opponents appear void of all principle and enemies of all religion. Stark however would, in Britain, be a very fingular character, confider-ed as a clergyman. The frivolous fecrets of Mafonry have either engroffed his whole mind, or he has laboured in them as a lucrative trade, by which he took advantage of the folly of others. The contest between Stark and the Trjumvirate at Berlin engaged the public attention much more than we should imagine that a thing of so private a nature would do. But the characters were very notorious; and it turned the attention of the public to those clandestine attacks which were made in

in every quarter on the civil and religious eftablishments. It was obvious to every perform, that these reading focieties had all on a fudden become very numerous; and the characters of those who patronifed them only increased the sufficients which were now raised.

The first work that speaks expressly of the German Union, is a very sensible performance "On "the Right of Princes to direct the Religion of their "Subjects." The next is a curious work, a fort of narrative Dialogue on the Characters of Nicholai, Gedicke, and Biester. It is chiefly occupied with the contest with Dr. Stark, but in the 5th part, it treats particularly of the German Union.

About the fame time appeared fome farther account, in a book called Archives of Fanaticism and Illuminatism. But all these accounts are very vague and unfatisfactory. The fullest account is to be had in a work published at Leipzig by Gofchen the bookfeller. It is entitled, "More Notes " than Text, or the German Union of XXII, a new " Secret Society for the Good of Mankind," Leipzig 1789. The publisher says that it was sent him by an unknown hand, and that he published it with all speed, on account of the many mifchiefs which this Society, (of which he had before heard feveral reports,) might do to the world, and to the trade, if allowed to go on working in fecret. From this work, therefore, we may form a notion of this redoubtable Society, and judge how far it is practicable to prevent fuch fecret machinations against the peace and happiness of mankind.

There is another work, "Further information "concerning the German Union, (Nahere Beleuch-"tung der Deutsche Union,) also showing how, "for a moderate price, one may become a Scotch "Free "Free Mafon." Frankford and Leipzig, 1789. The author fays that he had all the papers in his hands; whereas the author of More Notes than Text acknowledges the want of fome. But very little additional light is thrown on the fubject by this work, and the first is still the most instructive, and will chiefly be followed in the account which is now to be laid before the reader.

The book More Notes than Text contains plans and letters, which the Twenty-two United Brethren have allowed to be given out, and of which the greatest part were printed, but were entrusted only to affured members.

No. I. is the first plan, printed on a fingle quarto page, and is addreffed, To all the Friends of Reafon, of Truth, and of Virtue. It is pretty well written, and states among other things, that " be-" caufe a great number of perfons are labouring, " with united effort, to bring Reafon under the " yoke, and to prevent all instruction, it is there-" fore neceffary that there be a combination which " fhall work in opposition to them fo that man-" kind may not fink anew into irrecoverable bar-" barifm, when Reafon and Virtue shall have been " completely fubdued, overpowered by the re-" ftraints which are put on our opinions."----" For this noble purpole a company of twenty-" two perfons, public inftructors, and men in pri-" vate stations, have united themselves, according 64 to a plan which they have had under confidera-" tion for more than a year and a half, and which, " in their opinion, contains a method that is fair 66 and irrefiftible by any human power, for pro-" moting the enlightening and forming of man-" kind, and that will gradually remove all the ob-" ftacles which superstition supported by force " has hitherto put in the way."

This

This addrefs is intended for an enlifting advertifement, and, after a few infignificant remarks on the Affociation, a rix-dahler is required along with the fubfcription of acquiefcence in the plan, as a compensation for the expences attending this mode of intimation and confent.

Whoever pays the rix-dahler, and declares his wish to join the Affociation, receives in a few days, No. II. which is a form of the Oath of fecrecy, alfo printed on a fingle 4 to page. Having fubscribed this, and given a full defignation of himfelf, he returns it agreeably to a certain address; and foon after, he gets No. III. printed on a 4 to sheet. This number contains what is called the Second Plan, to which all the subsequent plans and circular letters refer. A copy therefore of this will give us a pretty full and just notion of the Order, and its mode of declaration. It is intitled,

The Plan of the Twenty-Two, and begins with this declaration : "We have unit-"ed, in order to accomplifh the aim of the exalted Founder of Chriftianity, viz. the enlightening of mankind, and the dethronement of fuperfition and fanaticifm, by means of a fecret fraternization of all who love the work of God. "Our firft exertion, which has already been very extensive, confifts in this, that, by means of confidential perfons, we allow ourfelves to be announced every where as a Society united for the above-mentioned purpofe; and we invite and admit into brotherhood with ourfelves every perfon who has a fense of the importance of this matter, and wishes to apply to us and fee our plans.

" We

"We labour first of all to draw into our Affociation all good and learned writers. This we imagine will be the easier obtained, as they must derive an evident advantage from it. Next to fuch men, we seek to gain the masters and secretaries of the Post-offices, in order to facilitate our correspondence.

"Befides thefe, we receive perfons of every condition and ftation, excepting princes and their ministers. Their favourites, however, may be admitted, and may be useful by their influence in behalf of Truth and Virtue.

"When any perfon writes to us, we fend him an oath, by which he must abjure all treachery " 66 or difcovery of the Affociation, till circum-" stances shall make it proper for us to come for-" ward and fliow ourfelves to the world. When " he fubscribes the oath, he receives the plan, and " if he finds this to be what fatisfies his mind as " a thing good and honourable, he becomes our " friend only in fo far as he endeavours to gain " over his friends and acquaintances. Thus " we learn who are really our zealous friends, " and our numbers increase in a double pro-66 portion.

"This procedure is to continue till Providence fhall fo far blefs our endeavours, that we acquire an active Brother and coadjutor in every place of note, where there is any literary profeffion; and for this purpole we have a fecretary and proper office in the center of the Affociation, where every thing is expedited, and all reports received. When this happy epoch arrives, we begin our fecond operation." That is to fay,

"We intimate to all the Brotherhood in every "quarter, on a certain day, that THE GERMAN "UNION " UNION has now acquired a confifience, and we now divide the fraternifed part of the nation into ten or twelve Pravinces or Diocefes, éach directed by its Diocefan at his office; and thefe are fo arranged in due fubordination, that all bufinefs comes into the UNION-HOUSE as into the center of the whole.

"Agreeably to this manner of proceeding there are two claffes of the Brotherhood, the Ordi*nary* and the Managing Brethren. The latter alone know the aim of the affociation, and all the means for attaining it; and they alone conftitute the UNION, the name, and the connection of which is not intended to be at all confpicuous in the world.

" To this end the business takes a new exter-" nal form. The Brethren, to wit, fpeak not of " the Union in the places where they refide, nor " of a Society, nor of enlightening the people; 66 but they affemble, and act together in every 66 quarter, merely as a LITERARY SOCIETY, " bring into it all the lovers of reading and of 66 ufeful knowledge; and fuch in fact are the Ordinary Brethren, who only know that an 66 Affociation exifts in their place of refidence ٢٢. " for the encouragement of literary men, but by no means that it has any connection with 66 any other fimilar Society, and that they all " conftitute one whole. But thefe Societies will naturally point out to the intelligent Brethren ٢٢ -" fuch perfons as are proper to be felected for " carrying forward the great work. For per-" fons of a ferious turn of mind are not mere " loungers in fuch company, but flow in their " conversation the interest they take in real in-" ftruction. And the caft of their reading, which " must not be checked in the beginning in the " fmalleft

" finalleft degree, although it may be gradually " directed to proper subjects of information, will " point out in the most unequivocal manner their " peculiar ways of thinking on the important " subjects connected with our great object. Here, " therefore, the active Brethren will observe in fecret, and will felect those whom they think 66 " valuable acquifitions to the facred Union. They " will invite fuch perfons to unite with them-" felves in their endeavours to enlighten the " reft of mankind, by calling their attention to " profitable fubjects of reading, and to proper " books. Reading Societies, therefore, are to be " formed in every quarter, and to be furnished with proper books. In this provision attention must be paid to two things. The taste of the 66 public must be complied with, that the So-66 " ciety may have any "effect at all in bringing " men together who are born for somewhat more " than just to look about them. But the general " taste may, and must also be carefully and skil-" fully directed to subjects that will enlarge the " comprehension, will fortify the heart, and, by " habituating the mind to novelty, and to fuc-" cefsful difcovery, both in phyfics and in morals, " will hinder the timid from being ftartled at " " doctrines and maxims which are fingular, or. " perhaps opposite to those which are current in ordinary fociety. Commonly a man fpeaks 66 " as if he thought he was uttering his own fen-" timents, while he is only echoing the general " found. Our minds are dreffed in a prevailing " fashion as much as our bodies, and with stuff as little congenial to sentiment, as a piece " of woollen cloth is to the human fkin. So care-" less and indolent are men, even in what they call ferious conversation. Till reflection be-" comes $2 \mathbf{D}$

THE GERMAN UNION. CHAP. 111.

" comes a habit, what is really a thought ftartles, " however fimple, and, if really uncommon, it " aftonishes and confounds. Nothing, therefore, " can fo powerfully tend to the improvement of the human character, as well-managed Read-" ing Societies.

"When these have been established in different " places, we must endeavour to accomplish the " following intermediate plans: 1. To introduce " a general literary Gazette or Review, which, " by uniting all the learned Brethren, and com-" bining with judgment and addrefs all their " talents, and steadily proceeding according to " a diftinct and precise plan, may in time sup-" plant every other Gazette, a thing which its intrinfic merit and comprehensive plan will " eafily accomplish. 2. To select a secretary for " our Society, who shall have it in charge to " commission the books which they shall felect " in conformity to the great aim of the Affocia-tion, and who fhall undertake to commission "all other books for the curious in his neigh-bourhood. If there be a bookfeller in the place, " who can be gained over and fworn into the "Society, it will be proper to choose him for "this office, fince, as will be made more "plain afterwards, the trade will gradually " come into the plan, and fall into the hands " of the Union.

" And now, every eye can perceive the pro-" greffive moral influence which the Union will " acquire on the nation. Let us only conceive " what fuperfition will lofe, and what inftruc-"tion must gain by this; when, 1. In every Reading Society the books are felected by our Fraternity. 2. When we have confidential " perfons in every quarter, who will make it " their

" their ferious concern to fpread fuch perform-" ances as promote the enlightening of mankind, and to introduce them even into every cot-" tage. 3. When we have the loud voice of the " public on our fide, and fince we are able; " either to banish into the shade all the fanatical " writings which appear in the reviews that are " commonly read, or to warn the public against " them; and, on the other hand, to bring into 66 notice and recommend those performances " alone which give light to the human mind. 4. When we by degrees bring the whole trade 66 " of bookfelling into our hands, (as the good " writers will fend all their performances into " the market through our means) we shall bring " it about, that at last the writers who labour in " the caufe of fuperstition and restraint, will have neither a publisher nor readers. 5. When, " laftly, by the fpreading of our Fraternity, all good hearts and fenfible men will adhere to us, and by our means will be put in a con-" dition that enables them to work in filence " upon all courts, families, and individuals in " every quarter, and acquire an influence in the " appointment of court-officers, stewards, fecre-" taries, parish-priests, public teachers, and pri-« vate tutors.

"Remark, That we fhall fpeedily get the trade into our hands, (which was formerly the aim of the Affociation called the Gelehrtenbuchhandlung) is conceivable by this, that every writer who unites with us immediately acquires a triple number of readers, and finds friends in every place who promote the fale of his performance; fo that his gain is increafed mainfold, and confequently all will quit the bookfellers, and accede to us by degrees. Had the "above"

" above named Affociation been conftructed in " this manner, it would, long ere now, have " been the only fhop in Germany."

The book called Fuller Information, &c. gives a more particular account of the advantages held forth to the literary manufacturers of Germany by this Union for God's work. The class of literary Brothers, or writers by trade, was divided into Mesopolites, Aldermen, Men, and Cadets.

The MESOPOLITES, or Metropolitans, are to be attached to the archive-office, and to be taken care of in the Union-houfe, when in firaits through age or misfortune. They will be occupied in the department of the fciences or arts, which this Affociation profefs principally to cherifh. They are alfo Brethren of the third degree of Scotch Free Mafonry, a qualification to be explained afterwards. The Union-houfe is a building which the oftenfible Founder of the Union profeffed to have acquired, or fpeedily to acquire at —, through the favour and protection of a German Prince, who is not named.

ALDERMEN are perfons who hold public offices, and are engaged to exercise their genius and talents in the sciences. These also are Brothers of the third rank of Scotch Free Masonry, and out of their number are the Diocesans and the Directors of the Reading Societies selected.

The members who are defigned fimply MEN, are Brothers of the fecond rank of Mafonry, and have also a definite scientific occupation assigned them.

The CADETS are writers who have not yet merited any particular honours, but have exhibited fufficient difpositions and talents for different kinds of literary manufacture.

Every

Every member is bound to bring the productions of his genius to market through the Union. An Alderman receives for an original work 80 per cent. of the returns, and 70 for a translation. The member of the next clafs receives 60, and the Cadet 50. As to the expence of printing, the Alderman pays nothing, even though the work fhould lie on hand unfold; but the Man and the Cadet must pay one-half. Three months after publication at the fairs an account is brought in, and after this, yearly, when and in what manner the author fhall defire.

In every Diocefe will be eftablished at leaft one Reading Society, of which near 800 are proposed. To each of these will a copy of an Alderman's work be fent. The fame favour will be shown to a differtation by a Man, or by a Cadet, provided that the manuscript is documented by an Alderman, or formally approved by him upon ferious perusal. This imprimatur, which must be confidered as a powerful recommendation of the work, is to be published in the General Review or Gazette. This is to be a vehicle of political as well as of literary news; and it is hoped that, by its intrinsic worth, and the recommendation of the members, it will foon supplant all others. (With respect to affairs of the Union, a fort of cypher was to be employed in it. Each Diocefan was there designed by a letter, of a fize that marked his rank, and each member by a number. It was to appear weekly, at the very small price of five-and-twenty shillings.)—But let us return to the plan.

When every thing has been established in the manner set forth above, the Union will assume the following republican form, (the reader always recollecting that this is not to appear to the

the world, and to be known only to the managing Brethren.

Here, however, there is a great blank. The above-named fketch of this Conftitution did not come to the hands of the perfon who furnished the bookfeller with the reft of the information. But we have other documents which give fufficient information for our purpose. In the mean time, let us just take the papers as they stand.

No. IV. Contains a lift of the German Union, which the fender received in manufcript. Here we find many names which we fhould not have expected, and mifs many that were much more likely to have been partners in this patriotic . fcheme. There are feveral hundred names, but very few defignations; fo that it is difficult to point out the individuals to the public. Some however are defigned, and the writer obferves that names are, found, which, when applied to fome individuals whom he knows, accord furprifingly with the ancedotes that are to be feen in the private correspondence of the Illuminati, and in the romance called Materials for the Hiftory of Socratifm (Illuminatifm)*. It is but a difagreeable remark, that the lift of the Union contains

* This, by the by, is a very curious and entertaining work, and, had the whole affair been better known in this country, would have been a much hetter antidote against the baneful effects of that Affociation than any thing that I can give to the public, being written with much accuteness and knowledge of the human mind, and agreeably diversified with anecdote and ironical exhibition of the affected wildom and philanthropy of the knavish Founder and his coadjutors. If the prefent imperfect and defultory account shall be found to interess the public, I doubt not but that a translation of this novel, and fome other fanciful performances on the subject, will be read with entertainment and profit.

the names of many public teachers, both from the pulpit, and from the accademic chair in all its degrees; and among thefe are feveral whole cyphers flow that they have been active hands. Some of these have in their writings given evident proofs of their misconception of the simple truths, whether dogmatical or historical, of re-vealed religion, or of their inclination to twift and manufacture them fo as to chime in with the religion and morality of the Sages of France. But it is more distressing to meet with unequivocal names of fome who profess in their writings to confider these subjects as an honest man should confider them, that is, according to the plain and common fense of the words; whereas we have demonstrative proofs that the German Union had the diametrically opposite purpose in view. The only female in the lift is the Grafin von der Recke, the Lady who gave Dr. Stark of Darmstadt so much trouble about his Tonfure. This Lady, as we have already seen, could not occupy herself with the frivolity of dress, slirtation, or domestic cares. " Femina fonte patet, vir pectore." She was not pleafed however at finding her name in fuch a Plebeian lift, and gave oath, along with Biefter at the centre, that fhe was not of the Affociation. I fee that the public was not fatisfied with this denial. The Lady has published fome more fcandal against Stark fince that time, and takes no notice of it; and there have appeared many accounts of very ferious literary connec-tions between thefe two perfons and the man who was afterwards difcovered to be the chief agent of the Union.

No. V. is an important document. It is a letter addreffed to the fworn members of the Union, reminding the beloved fellow-workers that "the by-"gone

" gone management of the business has been ex-" pensive, and that the XXII. do not mean to make " any particular charge for their own compensation. " But that it was necessary that all and each of the But that it was necenary that arrand each of the members fhould know precifely the object of the Affociation, and the way which mature confideration had pointed out as the most effectual method of attaining this object. Then, and not till then, could the worthy members act by one plan, and " confequently with united force. To accomplish " this purpose, one of their number had composed " a Treatife on Instruction, and the means of promot-"ing it*" This work has been revised by the whole "ing it" This work has been revited by the whole number, and may be confidered as the refult of their deepeft reflection. They fay, that it would be a fignal misfortune fhould this Affociation, this under-taking, fo important for the happiness of mankind, be cramped in the very beginning of its brilliant progress. They therefore propose to print this work, this Holy Scripture of their faith and practice, by subscription. (They here give a short account of the work) And they request the members to of the work.) And they request the members to encourage the work by fubscribing, and by exerting more than their usual activity in procuring fubscriptions, and in recommending the performance in the newspapers. Four persons are named as Diocesans, who are to receive the money, which they beg may be speedily advanced in order to purchase paper, that the work may be ready for the first fair (Easter 1788.)

No. VI. is a printed paper (as is No. V.) without date, farther recommending the Effay on Inftruction. No. VII. is in manufcript, without date. It is ad-

dreffed to " a worthy man," intimating that the like are fent to others, to whom will also speedily be forwarded an improved plan, with a request to cancel or deftroy the former contained in No. III. It is added, that the Union now contains, among many others, more than two hundred of the most respectable perfons in Germany, of every rank and condition, and that in the courfe of the year, (1788,) a general lift will be fent, with a requeft that the receiver will point out fuch as he does not think worthy of perfect confidence. It concludes with another recommendation of the book on Instruction, on the returns from which first work of the German Union the fupport of the fecretary's office is to depend.

Accordingly No. VIII. contains this plan, but it is not entitled The Improved Plan. Such a denomination would have called in doubt the infallibility of the XXII. It is therefore called the Progressive (vorlaufig) plan, a title which leaves room for every fubsequent change. It differs from the former only in fome unimportant circumstances. Some expreffions, which had given offence or railed fufpicions, are fostened or cancelled. Two copies of this, which we may call A and B, are given, differing alfo in fome circumstances.

" The great aim of the German Union is the good " of mankind, which is to be attained only by means Gof mental illumination (Auffklarung) and the de-"throning of fanaticifm and moral defpotifm." Neither paper has the expression which immediately followed in the former plan, "that this had been "the aim of the exalted founder of Christianity." The paper A refers, on the present subject, to a differtation printed in 1787, without a name, On the freedom of the Press and its Limitation. This is one of the most licentious pieces that has been published on on the fubject, not only enforcing the most unqualified liberty of publishing every thing a man pleases, but exemplifying it in the most scandalous manner; libelling characters of every fort, and perfons of every condition, and this frequently in the most abu-five language, and expressions to coarse, as shewed the author to be either habituated to the coarsest company, or determined to try boldly once for all, what the public eye can bear. The piece goes on: "The "Union confiders it as a chief part of its fecret plan " of operation, to include the trade of bookfelling " in their circle. By getting hold of this, they " have it in their power to increase the number of " writings which promote inftruction, and to leffen " that of those which mar it, fince the authors of " the latter will by degrees lofe both their publifu-" ers and their readers. That the prefent book-" fellers may do them no harm, they will by degrees " draw in the greater part of them to unite with " them."-The literary newspaper is here ftrongly infifted on, and, in addition to what was faid in the former plan, it is faid, "that they will include po-" litical news, as of mighty influence on the public "mind, and as a fubject that merits the clofest at-" tention of the moral inftructor. For what illumi-" nation is that mind fusceptible of, that is fo blind-" ed by the prejudice created and nurfed by the " habits of civil fubordination, that it worfhips flu-" pidity or wickedness under a coronet, and neglects " talents and virtue under the bearskin cap of the " boor ? We must therefore represent political " transactions, and public occurrences, not as they affect that artificial and fantastical creature of ima-66 " gination that we fee every where around us wheel-" ed about in a chariot, but as it affects a MAN, ra-" tional, active, free born man. By thus ftripping " the transaction of all foreign circumstances, we " fee

" fee it as it affects, or ought to affect, ourfelves. Be affured that this new form of political intelligence will be highly interefting, and that the Gazette of the Union will foon fuperfede all others, and, of itfelf, will defray all our neceffary expences."

This is followed by fome allufions to a fecret correfpondence that is quick, unfufceptible of all difcovery or treachery, and attended with no expence, by which the bufinefs of the fecret plan (different from either of thole communicated to the fworn Brethren at large) is carried on, and which puts the members in a condition to learn every thing that goes on in the world, for or against their caufe, and alfo teaches them to know mankind, to gain an influence over all, and enables them effectually to promote their best fubjects into all offices, &c. and finally, from which every member, whether states. Some passes here and in another place make me imagine that the Union hoped to get the command of the post-offices, by having their Brethren in the direction.

It is then faid, that " it is fuppofed that the levy " will be fufficiently numerous in the fpring of the " enfuing year. When this takes place, a general " fynod will be held, in which the plan of fecret " operations will be finally adjufted, and accommo-" dated to local circumftances, fo as to be digefted " into a law that will need no farther alteration. A " proper perfon will fet off from this fynod, with " full powers to vifit every quarter where there are " fworn Brethren, and he will there eftablifh a " Lodge after the ancient fimple ritual, and will " communicate 'verbally the plan of fecret opera-" ration, and certain inftructions. Thefe Lodges " will then eftablifh a managing fund or box. Each " Lodge

" Lodge will alfo eftablifh a Reading Society, under "the management of a bookfeller refiding in the "place, or of fome perfon acquainted with the me-"chanical conduct of things of this nature. There "muft alfo be a collector and agent, (Expediteur,) "fo that in a moment the Union will have its offices or comptoirs in every quarter, through which "it carries on the trade of bookfelling, and guides "the ebb and flow of its correfpondence. And thus the whole machine will be fet in motion, and its "activity is all directed from the centre."

I remark, that here we have not that exclusion of Princes and ministers that was in the former plan; they are not even mentioned. The exclusion in exprefs terms could not but furprife people, and appear fomewhat furpricious.

No. IX. is a printed circular letter to the fworn Brethren, and is fubfcribed "by their truly affociat-"ed Brother Barthels, Oberamtfman (first bailiff) "for the King of Pruffia, at Halle on the Saal."

In this letter the Brethren are informed that " the " XXII. were wont to meet fometimes at Halle, and " fometimes at Berlin. But unavoidable circum-" flances oblige them not only to remain concealed " for sometime, but even to give up their relation " to the Union, and withdraw themfelves from any " fhare in its proceedings. Thefe circumflances " are but temporary, and will be completely ex-" plained in due time. They truft, however, that " this necessary flep on their part will not abate the " zeal and activity of men of noble minds, engag-" ed in the caufe by the conviction of their own " hearts. They have therefore communicated to " their worthy Brother BARTHELS all neceffary in-" formations, and have unanimoufly conferred on " him the direction of the fecretary's office, and " have provided him with every document and " mean mean of carrying on the correspondence. He has " devoted himfelf to the honourable office, giving " up all other employments. They observe that by " this change in the manner of proceeding, the Affociation is freed from an objection made with 6.6 juffice to all other fecret focieties, namely, that $ C. 66 the members fubject themfelves to blind and unqualified fubmifion to unknown fuperiors."---. 66 " The Society is now in the hands of its own avow-66 ed members. Every ching will foon be arranged according to a conflitution purely republican; a 66 " Diocefan will be chofen, and will direct in every " province, and report to the centre every fecond 66 month, and inftructions and other informations " will issue in like manner from the centre.

" If this plan shall be approved of by the Affo-66 ciated, H. Barthels will transmit to all the Dio-66 cefes general lifts of the Union, and the PLAN OF " SECRET OPERATION, the refult of deep medita-66 tion of the XXII. and admirably calculated for 66 carrying on with irrefiftable effect their noble and patriotic plan. To flop all cabal, and put an end ... " to all flander and fuspicion, H. Barthels thinks it " proper that the Union shall step forward, and declare itfelf to the world, and openly name fome " 66 of its most respectable members. The public 66 must however be informed only with respect to the exterior of the Society, for which purpole he 66 66 had written a fheet to be annexed as an appendix " to the work, On Instruction, declaring that to be 66 the work of the Society, and a fufficient indica-66 tion of its most honourable aim. He defires fuch members as choofe to fhare the houour 66 66 with him, to fend him their names and proper 66 defignations, that they may appear in that Ap-66 pendix. And, lafily, he requefts them to in-66 firuct him, and co-operate with him, according 66 to

" to the concerted rules of the Union, in promoting the caufe of God and the happiness of mankind."

The appendix now alluded to makes No. X. of the packet fent to the Bookfeller Gofchen of Leipzig, and is dated December 1788. It is alfo found in the book On Inftruction, &c. printed at Leipzig in 1789, by Walther. Here, however, the Appendix is dated January 1789. This edition agrees in the main with that in the book from which I have made fuch copious extracts, but differs in fome particulars that are not unworthy of remark.

" In the packet it is written, " The Under-" figned as Member and Agent of the German " Union, in order to rectify feveral miltakes and " injurious flanders and accufations, thinks it ne-" ceffary that the public it felf fhould judge of their " object and conduct."-Towards the end it is faid, "and all who have any doubts may apply " to those named below, and are invited to write " to them." No names however are fubjoined, In the Appendix to the book it is only faid, " the " agent of the German Union," &c. and " per-" fons who wish to be better informed may write " to the agent, under the address, To the German " Union-under cover to the shop of Walther, " bookfeller in Leipzig."-Here too there are no names, and it does not appear that any perfon has chofen to come from behind the curtain*.

* Walther is an eminent bookfeller, and carries on the bufinefs of publifhing to a great extent, both at Leipzig and other places. He was the publifher of the most virulent attacks on the King of Pruffia's Edict on Religion, and was brought into much trouble about the Commentary by Pott which is mentioned above. He alfo publifhes many of the fceptical and licentious writings which have fo much diffurbed the peace of Germany.

There

There has already been fo much faid about Enlightening, that the reader must be almost tired of it. He is affured in this performance that the Illumination proposed by the Union is not that of the Wolfenbuttle Fragments, nor that of Horus, nor that of Babrdt. The Fragments and Horus are books which aim directly, and without any concealment, to deftroy the authority of our Scriptures, either as hiftorical narrations or as revelations of the intentions of providence and of the future profpects of man. The Theological writings of Babrdt are grofs perversions, both of the fense of the text, and of the moral infructions contained in it, and are perhaps the most exceptionable performances on the fubject. They are fligmatifed as abfurd, and coarfe, and indecent, even by the writers on the fame fide ; yet the work recommended to often as containing the elements of that Illumination which the world has to expect from the Union, not only coincides in its general principles with these performances, but is almost an abftract of fome of them, particularly of his Popular Religion, his Paraphrase on the Sermon on the Mount, and his Morality of Religion. We have also feen that the book on the Liberty of the Prefs is quoted and recommended as an elementary book. Nay both the work on Instruction and that on the Liberty of the Prefs are now known to be Bahrdt's.

But thefe principles, exceptionable as they may be, are probably not the worft of the inftitution. We see that the outfide alone of the Union is to be fhewn to the public. Barthels felicitates the public that there is no fubordination and blind obedience to unknown Superiors; yet, in the fame paragraph, he tells us that there is a fecret plan of operations, that is known only to the Centre and the Confidential Brethren. The author of Fuller Information fays that he has this plan, and would print it, were he

he not reftrained by a promise*. He gives us enough however to show us that the higher mysleries of the Union are precifely the fame with those of the Illuminati. Christianity is expressly faid to have been a Myslical Association, and its founder the Grand Master of a Lodge. The Apostles, Peter, James, John, and Andrew, were the Elest, and Brethren of the Third Degree, and initiated into all the mysleries. The remaining Apostles were only of the Second Degree ; and the Seventy-two were of the First degree. Into this degree ordinary Christians may be admitted, and prepared for further advancement. The great mistery is; that J----C----was a Naturalist, and taught the doctrine of a Supreme Mind, the Spectator, but not the Governer of the World, pretty nearly in the fense of the Stoics. The Initiated Brethren were to be inftructed by reading proper books. Those particularly recommended are Baf dow's Practical Knowledge, Eberhard's Apology for Socrates, Babrdt's Apology for Reafon, Steinbardt's System of Moral Education, Meiner's Ancient Mysteries, Babrdt's Letters on the Bible, and Babrdi's Completion of the Plan and Aim of J---C——. These books are of the most Antichristian character, and fome of them aim at fhaking off all moral obligation whatever.

Along with thefe religious doctrines, are inculcated the most dangerous maxims of civil conduct. The defpotifm that is aimed at over the minds of men, and the machinations and intrigues for obtaining possession of places of trust and influence, are equally alarming; but being perfectly fimilar to those of the Illuminati, it is needless to mention them.

The chief intelligence that we get from this author is that the CENTRE of the Union is at a house

* This I find to be falle, and the book a common job.

house in the neighbourhood of Halle. It is a fort of tavern, in a vineyard immediately without the city. This was bought by Doctor KARL FRIE-DERICH BAHRDT, and fitted up for the amufement of the University Students. He calls it BAHRDT'S RUHE (Bahrdt's Repose). The author thinks that this must have been the work of the Affociation, becaufe Bahrdt had not a farthing, and was totally unable for fuch an undertaking. He may however have been the contriver of the inftitution. He has never affirmed or denied this in explicit terms; nor has he ever faid who are the XXII coadjutors. Wucherer, au eminent bookfeller at Vienna, seems to have been one of the most active hands, and in one year admitted near two hundred members, among whom is his own shoemaker. He has published some of the most profigate pamphlets which have yet appeared in Germany:

The publication of the lift of members alarmed the nation; perfons were aftonished to find themfelves in every quarter in the midst of villains who were plotting against the peace and happiness of the country, and destroying every fentiment of religion, morality, or loyalty. Many perfons pub-lithed in the newspapers and literary journals affirmations and proofs of the false infertion of their names. Some acknowledged that curiofity had made them enter the Affociation, and even continue their correspondence with the Centre, in order to learn fomething of what the Fraternity had in view, but declared that they had never taken any part in its proceedings. But, at the fame time, it is certain that many Reading Societies had been set up during these transactions, in every quarter of Germany, and that the oftenfible managers were inigeneral of very fuspicious characters, both as to morals and loyalty. The Union had actually fet up a preis of their own at Calbe, in the neighbourhood of Halberstadt. Every day there appeared ftronger proofs of a combination of the Journalists, Reviewers, and even of the publishers and bookfellers, to suppress the writings which appeared in defence of the civil and ecclefiaftical conftitutions of the States of Germany. The extenfive literary manufacture of Germany is carried on in fuch a manner that it is impoffible for any thing lefs than the joint operation of the whole federated powers to prevent this. The fpirit of freethinking and innovating in religious matters had been remarkably prevalent in the dominions of the King of Pruffia, having been much encouraged by the indifference of the late King. One of the vileft things published on this occasion was an abominable farce, called the Religion Edict. This was traced to Bahrdt's Ruhe, and the Doctor was arrefled, and all his papers feized and ranfacked. The civil Magiflrate was glad of an opportunity of expifcating the German Union, which common fame had alfo traced hither. The correspondence was accordingly examined, and many difcoveries were made, which there was no occasion to communicate to the public, and the profecution of the bufinefs of the Union was by this means flopped. But the perfons in high office at Berlin agree in faying that the Affociation of writers and other turbulent perfons in Germany has been but very faintly hit by this blow, and is almost as active as ever.

The German Union appears a mean and precipitate Affociation. The Centre, the Archives, and the Secretary are contemptible. All the Archives that were found were the plans and lifts of the members and a parcel of letters of correspondence. The correspondence and other business was managed by an an old man in fome very inferior office or judicatory, who lived at bed and board in Bahrdt's houfe for about fix fhillings a week, having a cheft of papers and a writing-defk in the corner of the common room of the houfe.

Bahrdt gives a long narration of his concern in the affair, but we can put little confidence in what he fays : yet as we have no better authority, I fhall give a very fhort abftract of it, as follows :

He faid, that he learned Cofmo-political Free Mafonry in England, when he was there getting pupils for his academy---but neglected it on his return to Germany. Some time after his fettlement he was roufed by a vifit from a flranger who paffed for an Englishman, but whom he afterwards found to be a Dutch officer --- (he gives a defcription which bears confiderable refemblance to the Prince or General Salms who gave fo much diffurbance to the States General)---He was ftill more excited by an anonymous letter giving him an account of a Society which was employed in the inftruction of mankind, and a plan of their mode of operations, nearly the fame with that of No. III. He then fet up a Lodge of Free Masonry on Cosmo-political principles, as a preparation for engaging in this great plan---he was ltopped by the National Lodge, becaufe he had no patent from it .--- This obliged him to work in fecret .--- He met with a gentleman in a coffee-houfe, who entreated him to go on, and promifed him great affistance---this he got from time to time, as he flood most in need of it, and he now found that he was working in concert with many powerful though unknown friends, each in his own circle. The plan of operation of the XXII. was gradually unfolded to him, and he got folemn promifes of being made acquainted with his colleagues. But he now found, that after he had fo effentially ferved their noble. caufe caufe, he was dropped by them in the hour of danger, and thus was made the facrifice for the public good. The last packet which he received was a request from a Friend to the Union to print two performances fent him, with a promise of 100 dahlers for his trouble. These were the abominable farce called the Religion Edict, and fome Differtations on that Royal Proclamation.

He then gives an account of his fystem of Free Masonry, not very different from Weishaupt's Mafonic Christianity—and concludes with the following abstract of the advantages of the Union—Advancement of Science—A general interest and concern for Artsand Learning—Excitement of Talents--Check of Scribbling—Good Education—Liberty— Equality—Hospitality—Delivery of many from Misfortunes—Union of the Learned—and at last—perhaps—Amen.

What the meaning of this enigmatical conclusion is we can only guefs—and our conjectures cannot be very favourable.

The narration, of which this is a very flort index, is abundantly entertaining; but the opinion of the moft intelligent is, that it is in a great meafure ficitious, and that the contrivance of the Union is moftly his own. Although it could not be legally proved that he was the author of the farce, every perfon in court was convinced that he was, and indeed it is perfectly in Bahrdt's very fingular manner. This invalidates the whole of his flory—and he afterwards acknowledges the farce (at leaft by implication) in feveral writings, and boafts of it.

For thefe reafons I have omitted the narration in detail. Some information, however, which I have received fince, feems to confirm his account, while it diminifhes its importance. I now find that the book called Fuller Information is the performance of a clergyman a clergyman called Schutz, of the loweft clafs, and by no means of an eminent character .- Another performance in the form of a dialogue between X, Y, and Z, giving nearly the fame account, is by Pott, the dear friend of Bradht and of his Union, and anthor of the Commentary on the Edict. Schutz got his materials from one Roper, an expelled student of debauched morals, who fubfitted by copying and vending filthy manufcripts. Bahrdt fays, that he found him naked and flarving, and, out of pity, took him into his houfe, and employed him as an amanuenfis. Roper stole the papers at various times, taking them with him to Leipzig, whither he went on pretence of ficknefs. At last Schutz and he went to Berlin together, and gave the information on which Bahrdt was put in prifon. In fhort they all appear to have been equally profligates and traitors to each other, and exhibit a dreadful, but I hope a ufeful picture of the influence of this Illumination which fo wonderfully fascinates Germany.

This is all the direct information that I can pick up of the founder and the proceedings of the German Union. The project is coarfe, and palpably mean, aiming at the dahlers of entry-money and of annual contribution, and at the publication and pro-fitable fale of Dr. Bahrdt's books. This circumftance gives it ftrong features of its parentage-Philo speaks of Bahrdt in his Final Declaration in terms of contempt and abhorence. There is nothing ingenious, nothing new, nothing enticing, in the plans; and the immediate purpose of indulging the licentious tafte of the public comes fo frequently before the eye, that it bears all the marks of that groffnefs of mind, precipitancy, and impatient overfight that are to be found in all the voluminous writings of Dr. Bahrdt. Many in Germany, however, afcribe the Union to Weifhaupt, and fay that it is the Illuminati minati working in another form. There is no denying that the principles, and even the manner of proceeding, are the fame in every effential circumflance. Many paragraphs of the declamations circulated through Germany with the plans, are tran-fcribed verbatim from Weifhaupt's Corrected fystem of Illuminatifin. Much of the work On Instruction, and the Means for promoting it, is very nearly a copy of the fame work, blended with flovenly extracts from fome of his own writings-There is the fame feries of delutions from the beginning, as in Illuminatifm-Free Mafonry and Christianity are compounded-first with marks of respect-then Christianity is twifted to a purpole foreign from it, but the fame with that aimed at by Weishaupt-then it is thrown away altogether, and Natural Religion and Atheifm fublituted for it—For no perfon will have a moment's hefitation in faying, that this is the creed of the author of the books On Instruction and On the Liberty of the Prefs. Nor can he doubt that the political principles are equally anarchical with those of the Illuminati.-The endeavours also to get possession of public offices-of places of education-of the public mind, by the Reading Societies, and by publications-are fo many transcripts from the Illuminati. Add to this, that Dr. Bahrdt was an Illuminatus-and wrote the Better than Horus, at the command of Weishaupt. Nay, it is well known that Weishaupt was twice or thrice at Bahrdt's Ruhe during those transctions, and that he zealoufly promoted the formation of Reading Societies in feveral places .- But I am rather of the opinion that Weishaupt made those vifits in order to keep Dr. Bahrdt within fome bounds of decency, and to hinder him from hurting the caufe by his precipitancy, when fpurred on by the want of money. Weithaupt could not work in in fuch an unfkilful manner. But he would be very glad of fuch help as this coarfe tool could give him—and Bahrdt gave great help; for, when he was imprifoned and his papers feized, his Archives, as he called them, fnewed that there were many Reading Societies which his project had drawn together. The Pruffian States had above thirty, and the number of readers was aftonifhingly great—and it was found, that the pernicious books had really found their way into every hut. Bahrdt, by defeending a ftory lower than Weifhaupt, has greatly increafed the number of his pupils.

But, although I cannot confider the German Union as a formal revival of the Order under another name, I must hold those United, and the members of those Reading Societies, as Illuminati and Minervals. I must even confider the Union at a part of Spartacus' work. The plans of Weischaupt were partly carried into effect in their different branches—they were pointed out, and the way to carry them on are diffinitly deferibed in the private correspondence of the Order—It required little genius to attempt them in imitation. Bahrdt made the attempt, and in part fucceeded. Weishaupt's hopes were well founded—The leaven was not only diffributed, but the management of the fermentation was now understood, and it went on apace.

It is to be remarked, that nothing was found among Bahrdt's papers to fupport the flory he writes in his diary—no fuch correspondences but enough for detecting many of these Societics. Mary others however were found unconnected with Bahrdt's Ruhe, not of better character, either at to Morality or Loyalty, and some of them confiderable and expensive; and many proofs were found found of a combination to force the public to a certain way of thinking, by the management of the Reviews and Journals. The extensive dealings of Nicholai of Berlin gave him great weight in the book-making trade, which in Germany furpasses all our conceptions. The catalogues of new writings in fheets, which are printed twice a-year. for each of the fairs at Leipzig and Frankfort, would aftonish a British reader by the number. The bookfellers meet there, and at one glance fee the whole republic of literature, and, like Roman senators, decide the sentiments of distant provinces. By thus feeing the whole together, their speculations are national, and they really have it in their power to give what turn they please to the literature and to the fentiments of Germany. Still however they must be induced by motives. The motive of a merchant is gain, and every object appears in his eye fomething by which money may be made. Therefore in a luxurious and voluptuous nation, licentious and free-thinking books will abound. The writers fuggest, and the bookfellers think how the thing will tickle. Yet it must not be inferred, from the prevalence of fuch books, that fuch is the common fenfe of mankind, and that the writings are not the corrupters, but the corrupted, or that they are what they ought to be, because they please the public. We need only push the matter to an extremity, and its cause appears plain. Filthy prints will always create a greater crowd before the fliop window than the finest performances of Wollett. Licentious books will be read with a fluttering eagernefs, as long as they are not univerfally permitted; and pitiable will be the ftate of the nation when their number makes them familiar and no longer captivating.

But

But although it must be confessed that great encouragement was given to the fceptical, infidel, and licentious writings in Germany, we fee that it was still necessary to practife feduction. The Religionist was made to expect fome engaging ex-hibition of his faith. The Citizen must be told that his civil connections are refpected, and will be improved; and all are told that good manners or virtue is to be supported. Man is supposed to be, in very effential circumstances, what he wishes to be, and feels he ought to be : and he is cor-rupted by means of falfeshood and trick. The principles by which he is wheedled into wickedness in the first instance, are therefore such as are really addreffed to the general fentiments of man-kind: these therefore should be considered as more expressive of the public mind than those which he afterwards adopts, after this 'artificial education. Therefore Virtue, Patriotifm, Loyalty, Veneration for true and undefiled Religion, are really acknowledged by those corrupters to be the prevailing sentiments; and they are good if this prevalence is to be the test of worth. The mind that is otherwise affected by them, and hypocritically uses them in order to get hold of the uninitiated, that he may in time be made to cherish the contrary fentiments, cannot be a good mind, notwithstanding any pretensions it may make to the love of mankind.

No man, not Weishaupt himself, has made stronger professions of benevolence, of regard for the happiness of mankind, and of every thing that is amiable, than Dr. Bahrdt. It may not be uselefs to enquire what effect fuch principles have had on his own mind, and those of his chief coadjutors. Deceit of every kind is diffionourable; and the deceit that is profeffedly employed in the pro-2 G ceedings ceedings of the Union is no exception. No pious fraud whatever must be used, and pure religion must be presented to the view without all difguise.

- " The more fair Virtue's feen, the more fhe charms.
- " Safe, plain, and eafy, are her artlefs ways.
- " With face erect, her eyes look ftrait before ;
- " For dauntless is her march, her ftep fecure.
- " Not fo, pale Fraud-now here fhe turns, now there,
- " Still feeking darker shades, fecure in none,
- " Looks often back, and wheeling round and round,
- " Sinks headlong in the danger fhe would fhun."

The mean motive of the Protestant Sceptic is as inconfistent with our notions of honesty as with our notions of honour; and our fuspicions are justly raifed of the character of Dr. Bahrdt and his affociates, even although we do not suppose that their aim is the total abolishing of religion. With propriety therefore may we make fome enquiry about their lives and conduct. Fortunately this is eafy in the prefent instance. A man that has turned every eye upon himfelf can hardly efcape observation. But it is not fo easy to get fair information. The peculiar fituation of Dr. Bahrdt, and the caufe between him and the public, are of all others the most productive of mistake, mifrepresentation, obloquy, and injustice. But even here we are fortunate. Many remarkable parts of his life are established by the most respectable teftimony, or by judicial evidences; and, to make all fure, he has written his own life. I shall infert nothing here that is not made out by the two laft modes of proof, refting nothing on the first, however respectable the evidence may be. But I must observe, that his life was also written by his dear friend Pott, the partner of Walther the bookfeller.

ler. The ftory of this publication is curious, and it is inftructive.

Bahrdt was in prifon, and in great poverty. He intended to write his own life, to be printed by Walther. under a fictitious name, and in this work he intended to indulge his fpleen and his diflike of all those who had offended him, and in particular all priefts, and rulers, and judges, who had given him fo much trouble. He knew that the strange, and many of them feandalous anecdotes, with which he had fo liberally interlarded many of his former publications, would fet curiofity on tiptoe, and would procure a rapid fale as foon as the public should guess that it was his own performance, by the fingular but fignificant name which the pretended author would affume. He had almost agreed with Walther for a thousand dahlers, (about L. 200), when he was imprifoned for being the author of the farce fo often named, and of the commentary on the Religion Edict, written by Pott, and for the proceedings of the German Union. He was refused the use of pen and ink. He then applied to Pott, and found means to correfpond with him, and to give him part of his life already written, and materials for the reft, confifting of flories, and anecdotes, and correspondence. Pott fent him feveral fneets, with which he was fo pleafed, that they concluded a bargain. Bahrdt fays, that Pott was to have 400 copies, and that the reft wasto go to the maintenance of Bahrdt and his family, confifting of his wife, daughter, a Chriftina and her children who lived with them, &c. Pott gives a different account, and the truth was different from both, but of little consequence to us. Bahrdt's papers had been feized, and fearched for evidence of his transactions, but the stricteft attention was paid to the precife points of the charg charge, and no paper was abstracted which did not relate to these. All others were kept in a sealed room. Pott procured the removal of the scals and got possession of them. Bahrdt fays, that his wife and daughter came to him in prison, almost flarving, and told him that now that the room was opened, Pott had made an offer to write for their support, if he had the use of these papers-that this was the conclusion of the bargain, and that Pott took away all the papers. N. B. Pott was the affociate of Walther, who had great confidence in him (Anecdotenbuch fur meinen leiben Amtsbruder, p. 400) and had conducted the business of Stark's book, as has been already mentioned. No man was better known to Bahrdt, for they had long acted together as chief hands in the Union. He would therefore write the life of its founder con amore, and it might be expected to be a rare and tickling performance. And indeed it was. The first part of it only was published at this time; and the narration reaches from the birth of the hero till his leaving Leipzig in 1768. The attention is kept fully awake, but the emotions which fucceflively occupy the mind of the reader are nothing but strong degrees of aversion, difgust, and horror. The figure fet up to view is a monster, a man of talents indeed, and capable of great things; but loft to truth, to virtue, and even to the affectation of common decency-In short, a shameles profligate .- Poor Bahrdt was aftonished, -- stared -but, having his wits about him, faw that this life would fell, and would also fell another .--Without lofs of time, he faid that he would hold Pott to his bargain—but he reckoned without his hoft. " No, no," faid Pott, " your are not the " man I took you for-your correspondence was " put into my hands-I faw that you had de-" ceived

CHAP. III. THE GERMAN UNION.

You received Stark's manu-" fcript, to be printed by Walther-Walther and " you fent it hither to Michaelis, that I might fee " it during the printing. I wrote an illustratino " and a key, which made the fellow very ridiculous, and they were printed together, with one " " title page .- You know that we were caft in " court .--- Walther was obliged to print the work " as Stark first ordered, and we lost all our la-" bour.—So fhall you now, for I will commence an action this inftant, and let me fee with what " face you will defend yourfelf, within a few " weeks of your last appearance in court." Pott faid, "You may try this. My work is already fold, " and difperfed over all Germany-and I have " no objection to begin yours to-morrow—believe " me, it will fell." Bahrdt pondered—and refolved to write one himfelf.

This is another specimen of the Union.

DR. CARL FREDERICK BAHRDT was born in 1741. His father was then a parifh minister, and atterwards Professor of Theology at Leipzig, where he died, in 1775. The youth, when at College, enlisted in the Prussian service as a huss but was bought off by his father. He was M. A. in 1761. He became catechist in his father's church, was a popular preacher, and published fermons in 1765, and some controversial writings, which did him honour—But he then began to indulge in conviviality, and in anonymous pasquinades, nades, uncommonly bitter and offenfive. No perion was fafe-Profesiors-Magistrates-Clergymen, had his chief notice-allo students-and even comrades and friends. (Bahrdt fays, that thefe things might cut to the quick but they were all juft.) Unluckily his temperament was what the atomical philosophers (who can explain every thing by æthers and vibrations) call fanguine. He therefore (his own word) was a paffionate admirer of the ladies. Coming home from fupper he frequently met a young Mifs in the way to his lodgings, neatly dreffed in a rofe-coloured filk jacket and train, and a fable bonnet, coftly, and like a lady. One evening (after fome old Renish, as he fays,) he faw the lady home. Some time after, the mistress of the house, Madam Godschusky, came into his room, and faid that the poor maiden was pregnant. He could not help that-but it was very unfortunate, and would ruin him if known .- He therefore gave the old lady a bond for 200 dahlers, to be paid by instalments of twenty-five.----" The girl was fentible, and good, and as he had " already paid for it, and her conversation was " agreeable, he did not discontinue his acquaint-" ance." A comrade one day told him, that one Bel, a magistrate, whom he had lampooned, knew the affair, and would bring it into court, unless he immediately retrieved the bond. This bond was the only evidence, but it was enough. Neither Bahrdt nor his friend could raife the money. But they fell on another contrivance. They got Madam Godschusky to meet them at another house, in order to receive the money. Bahrdt was in a closet, and his comrade wore a fword. The woman could not be prevailed on to produce the bond till Bahrdt fhould arrive, and the money be put into her hands, with a prefent to herfelf. The comrade comrade tried to flutter her, and, drawing his fword, shewed her how men fenced-made passes at the wall-and then at her-but fhe was too firm-he then threw away his fword, and began to try to force the paper from her. She defended herfelf a good while, but at length he got the paper out of her pocket, tore it in pieces, opened the clofet door, and faid, "There you b----, there " is the honourable fellow whom you and your " wh-have bullied-but it is with me you have " to do now, and you know that I can bring you " to the gallows." There was a great fquabble to be fure, fays Bahrdt, but it ended, and I thought all was now over .- But Mr. Bel had got word of it, and brought it into court the very day that Bahrdt was to have made some very reverend ap-pearance at church. In short, after many attempts of his poor father to fave him, he was obliged to fend in his gown and band, and to quit the place. It was fome comfort, however, that Madam Godichusky and the young Miss did not fare much better. They were both imprisoned. Madam G. died sometime after of some shocking disease. The court records give a very different account of the whole, and particularly of the fciffle; but Bahrdt's ftory is enough.

Bahrdt fays, that his father was fevere---but acknowledges that his own temperament was hafty, (why does not his father's temperament excute fomething? Vibratiunculæ will explain every thing or nothing. "Therefore (again) I fometimes forgot myfelf. One day I laid a loaded piftol on the table, and told him that he fhould meet with that if he went on fo. But I was only feventeen."

Dr. Bahrdt was, of courfe, obliged to leave the place. His friends, and Semler in particular, an eminent theological writer, who had formed a very favourable favourable opinion of his uncommon talents, were affiduous in their endeavours to get an eftablifhment for him. But his high opinion of himfelf, his temper, impetuous, precipitant, and overbearing, and a bitter fatirical habit which he had freely indulged in his outfet of life, made their endeavours very ineffectual.

At last he got a professorship at Erlangen, then at Erfurth, and in 1771, at Giessen. But in all these places he was no fooner fettled than he got into difputes with his colleagues and with the eftablished church, being a firenuous partizan of the innovations which were attempted to be made in the doctrines of chriftianity. In his anonymous publica-tions, he did not truft to rational difcuffion alone, but had recourfe to ridicule and perfonal anecdotes, and indulged in the most cutting farcafrns and grofs fcurrility. Being fond of convivial company, his income was infufficient for the craving demand, and as foon as he found that anecdote and flander always procured readers, he never ceafed writing. He had wonderful readinefs and activity, and fpared neither friends nor foes in his anonymous performances. But this could not last, and his avowed theological writings were fuch as could not be fuffered in a Professor of Divinity. The very students at Gieffen were shocked with some of his liberties. After much wrangling in the church judicatories he was just going to be difmissed, when he got an invitation to Marschlins in Switzerland to superintend an academy. He went thither about the year 1776, and formed the feminary after the model of Bafedow's Philanthropine, or academy, at Deffau, of which I have already given fome account. It had acquired fome celebrity, and the plan was peculiarly fuited to Bahrdt's tafte, because it left him at liberty to introduce any fystem of religious or irreligious opinions opinions that he pleafed. He refolved to avail himfelf of this liberty, and though a clergyman and Doctor of Theology, he would outfirip even Bafedow, who had no ecclefiaftical orders to reftrain him. But he wanted the moderation, the prudence and the principle of Bafedow. He had, by this time, formed his opinion of mankind, by meditating on the feelings of his own mind. His theory of human nature was fimple—" The leading propenfities, fays he, of the human mind are three—Inftinctive liberty (Freyheitftriebe)—inftinctive activity (Triebe fur Thatigkeit)----and inftinctive love (Liebes triebe)." I do not wifh to mifunderftand him, but I can give no other tranflation.---" If a man is ob-" ftructed in the exercife of any of thefe propenfi-" ties he fuffers an injury.—The bufinefs of a good " education therefore is to teach us how they are to " be enjoyed in the higheft degree."

We need not be furprifed although the Doctor fhould find it difficult to manage the Cyclopedia in his Philanthropine in fuch a manner as to give fatisfaction to the neighbourhood, which was habituated to very different fentiments,—Accordingly he found his fituation as uncomfortable as at Gieffen. He fays, in one of his lateft performances; " that the Grifons were a ftrong inftance of the " immenfe importance of education. They knew " nothing but their handicrafts, and their minds " were as coarfe as their perfons." He quarrelled with them all, and was obliged to abfcond after lying fometime in arreft.

He came to Durkheim or Turkheim, where his father was or had been minister. His literary talents were well known.—After some little time he got an affociation formed for erecting and supporting a Philanthropine or house of education. A large fund was collected, and he was enabled to 2 H travel travel into Holland and England, to engage pupils, and was furnished with proper recommendations.—On his return the plan was carried into execution. The castle or residence of Count Leining Hartzburgh, at Heidescheim, having gardens, park, and every handsome accommodation, had been fitted up for it, and it was confectated by a solution religious festival in 1778.

But his old misfortunes purfued him. He had indeed no colleagues to quarrel with, but his avowed publications became every day more obnoxious-and when any of his anonymous pieces had a great run, he could not ftiffe his vanity and conceal the author's name. Of these pieces, some were even flocking to decency. It was indifferent to him whether it was friend or foe that he abufed; and fome of them were fo horribly injurious to the characters of the most respectable men in the flate, that he was continually under the correction of the courts of justice. There was hardly a man of letters that had ever been in his company who did not fuffer by it. For his conftant practice was to father every new flep that he took towards Atheifm on fome other perfon; and, whenever the reader fees, in the beginning of a book, any perfon celebrated by the author for found fenfe, profound judgment, accurate reafoning, or praifed for acts of friendship and kindness to himfelf, he may be affured that, before the close of the book, this man will convince Dr. Bahrdt in fome private conversation, that fome doctrine, cherished and venerated by all Christians, is a piece of knavish superstition. So lost was Dr. Bahrdt to all fenfe of shame. He faid that he held his own opinions independent of all mankind, and was indifferent about their praife or their reproach.

Bahrdt's

Bahrdt's licentious, very licentions life, was the caufe of most of these enormities. No income could suffice and he wrote for bread. The artful manner in which the literary manufacture of Germany was conducted, made it impossible to hinder the rapid dispersion of his writings over all Germany; and the indelicate and coarfe maw of the public was as ravenous as the fenfuality of Dr. Bahrdt, who really battened in the Epicurean fty. The confequence of all this was that he was obliged to fly from Heidesheim, leaving his furcties in the Pkilanthropine to pay about 14,000 dahlers, besides debts without number to his friends. He was imprifoned at Dienheim, but was releafed I know not how, and fettled at Halle. There he funk to be a keeper of a tavern and billiard-table, and his house became the refort and the bane of the fludents in the University.—He was obliged therefore to leave the city. He had somehow got funds which enabled him to buy a little vineyard, prettily fituated in the neighbourhood. This he fitted up with every accommodation that could invite the students, and called it Bahrdt's Ruhe. We have already feen the occupations of Dr. B. in this Buen Retiro-Can we call it otium cum dignitate? Alas, no! He had not lived two years here, buftling and toiling for the German Union, fometimes without a bit of bread-when he was fent to prifon at Halle, and then to Magdeburg, where he was more than a year in jail. He was fet at liberty, and returned to Bahrdt's Ruhe, not, alas, to live at ease, but to lie down on a fick-bed, where, after more than a year's fuffering increafing pain, he died on the 23d of April 1793, the most wretched and loathfome victim of unbridled fenfuality. The account of his cafe is written by a friend, a Dr. Jung, who profess to defend his memory memory and his principles. The medical defeription melted my heart, and I am certain would make his bitterest enemy weep. Jung repeatedly fays, that the cafe was not venereal-calls it the vineyard difeafe---the quickfilver difeafe, (he was dying of an unconquerable falivation,) and yet, through the whole of his narration, relates fymptoms and fufferings, which, as a medical man, he could not possibly mean to be taken in any other fense than as effects of pox. He meant to pleafe the enemies of poor Bahrdt, knowing that fuch a man could have no friends, and being himfelf ignorant of what friendship or goodness is. The fate of this poor creature affected me more than any thing I have read of a great while. All his open enemies put together have not faid fo much ill of him as his trufted friend Pott, and another confident, whole name I cannot recollect, who published in his lifetime an anonymous book called Bahrdt with the Iron Brow --- and this fellow Jung, under the absurd mask of friendship, exhibited the loathfome carcafe for a florin, like a malefactor's at Surgeon's Hall. Such were the fruits of the German Union, of that Illumination that was to refine the heart of man, and bring to maturity the feeds of native virtue, which are choaked in the hearts of other men by fuperflition and defpotifm. We fee nothing but mutual treachery and bafe desertion.

I do not concern myfelf with the gradual perverfion of Dr. Bahrdt's moral and religious opinions. But he affected to be the enlightener and reformer of mankind; and affirmed that all the mifchiefs in life originated from defpotifm fupported by fuperfition. "In vain," fays he, "do "we complain of the inefficacy of religion. All "politive religion is founded on injuffice. No "Prince " Prince has a right to prefcribe or fanction any fuch fyftem. Nor would he do it, were not the priefls the firmeft pillars of his tyranny, and fuperfition the ftrongeft fetters for his fubjects. He dares not fhow Religion as fhe is pure and undefiled----She would charm the eyes and the hearts of mankind, would immediately produce true morality, would open the eyes of freeborn man, would teach him what are his rights, and who are his oppreffors, and Princes would vanish from the face of the earth."

Therefore, without troubling ourfelves with the truth or falfehood of his religion of Nature, and affuming it as an indifputable point, that Dr. Bahrdt has feen it in this natural and fo effective purity, it is furely a very pertinent queftion, "Whether has the fight produced on his mind an effect fo far fupcrior to the acknowledged faintnefs of the impression of Christianity on the bulk of mankind, that it will be prudent to adopt the plan of the German Union, and at once put an end to the divisions which fo unfortunately alienate the minds of professing "Christians from each other?" The account here given of Dr. Bahrdt's life feems to decide the queftion

But it will be faid, that I have only related fo many inflances of the quarrels of Priefts and their flavifh adherents, with Dr. Bahrdt. Let us view him in his ordinary conduct, not as the champion and martyr of Illumination, but as an ordinary citizen, a hufband, a father, a friend, a teacher of youth, a clergyman.

When Dr. Bahrdt was a parifh-minifter, and prefident of fome inferior ecclefiattical diffrict, he was empowered to take off the cenfures of the church from from a young woman who had born a baftard child. By violence he again reduced her to the fame condition, and efcaped cenfure, by the poor girl's dying of a fever before her pregnancy was far advanced, or even legally documented. Alfo, on the night of the folemn farce of confectating his Philanthropine, he dehauched the maid-fervant, who bore twins, and gave him up for the father. The thing, I prefume, was not judicially proved, otherwife he would have furely been difgraced; but it was afterwards made evident, by the letters which were found by Pott, when he undertook to write his life. A feries of these letters had paffed between him and one Graf, a fleward, who was employed by him to give the woman the fmall pittance by which the and the infants were maintained. Remonstrances were made, when the money was not advanced ; and there are particularly letters about the end of 1779, which flow that Bahrdt had ceafed giving any thing. On the of February 1780, the infants (three years old) were taken away in the night, and were found expofed, the one at Ufftein, and the other at Worms, many miles diftant from each other, and almost frozen to death. The first was discovered by its moans, by a fhoemaker in a field by the road-fide, about fix in the morning; the other was found by two girls between the hedges in a lane, fet between two great ftones, palt all crying. The poor mother travelled up and down the country in quest of her infants, and hearing thefe accounts, found them both, and took one of them home; but not being able to maintain both, when Bahrdt's commiffinner refufed contributing any more, it remained with the good woman who had taken it in*.

* This is worfe than Rouffeau's conduct, who only fent his children to the Foundling hofpit: 1, that he might never know them again. (See his Confessions.)

Bahrdtwas married in 1772, while at Gieffen; but after washing the greatest part of his wife's little fortune left her by a former hufband, he was provoked by loting 1000 florins (about 110l.) in the hands of her brother who would not pay it up. After this he used her very ill, and speaks very contemptuously of her in his own account of his life, calling her a dowdy, jealous, and every thing contemptible. In two infamous novels, he exhibits characters, in which the is reprefented in a most cruel manner; yet this woman (perhaps during the honey-moon) was enticed by him one day into the bath, in the pond of the garden of the Philanthropine at Heidefheim, and there, in the fight of all the pupils did he (alfo undreffed) toy with his naked wife in the water. When at Halle, he used the poor woman extremely ill, keeping a miftrefs in the houfe, and giving her the whole command of the family, while the wife and daughter were confined to a feparate part of it. When in prifon at Magdeburgh, the ftrumpet lived with him, and bore him two children. He brought them all to his house when he was at liberty. Such barbarous usage made the poor woman at last leave him and live with her brother. The daughter died about a year before him, of an overdofe of laudanum given by her father, to procure fleep, when ill of a fever. He ended his own wretched life in the fame manner, unable, poor man, to bear his diffrefs, without the fmalleft compunction or forrow for his conduct; and the last thing he did was to fend for a bookfeller, (Vipink of Halle, who had published fome of his vile pieces,) and recommend his ftrumpet and her children to his protection, without one thought of his injured wife.

I shall end my account of this profligate monster with a specimen of his way of using his friends.

We may be fure, the poor man was aftonished when he faw his name before the public as one of the enlighteners of Christian Europe. He is really a man of worth, and of the moth irreproachable character, and knew that whatever might be the protection of British liberty, fuch conduct would ruin him with his own hearers, and in the minds of all his respectable countrymen. He therefore sent a vindication of his character from this flanderous abuse to the publishers of the principal newspapers and literary journals in Germany. The vindication is complete, and B. is convicted of having related what he could not poffibly have feen. It is worthy of remark, that the vindication did not appear in the Berlin Monat-[cbrift, nor in any of the journals which made favorable mention of the performances of the Enlighteners.

" Think not, indignant reader," fays Arbuthnot, " that this man's life is useles to mortals." It shews in a ftrong light the falfity of all his declamations in favour of his fo much praifed natural religion and univerfal kindnefs and humanity. No man of the party writes with more perfuafive energy, and, though his petulance and precipitant felf-conceit lead him frequently aftray, no man has occasionally put all the arguments of these philosophers in a clearer light; yet we fee that all is false and hollow. He is a vile hypocrite, and the real aim of all his writings is to make money, by foftering the fenfual propensities of human nature, although he fees and feels that the completion of the plan of the German Union would be an event more destructive and lamentable than any that can be pointed out in the annals of fuperstition. I will not fay that all partifans of Illumination are hogs of the fly of Epicurus like this wretch. But the reader must acknowledge that, in the inftitution of Weishaupt, there is the fame train of fenfual indulgence laid along the whole, and that purity of heart and life is no part of the morali-ty that is held forth as the perfection of human nature The final abolition of Christianity is undoubtedly one of its objects-whether as an end of their efforts, or as a mean for the attainment of fome end still more important. Purity of heart is perhaps the most distinctive feature of Christian morality. Of this Dr. Bahrdt feems to have had no conception; and his inflitution, as well as his writings, fhew him to have been a very coarfe fenfualist. But his taste, though coarfe, accorded with what Weifhaupt confidered as a ruling propenfity, by which he had the beft chance of fecuring the fidelity of his fubjects .- Craving defires, beyond the bonds of our means, were the natural confequences of indulgence; and fince the purity of Christian morality stood in his way, his first care was to clear the road by rooting it out altogether-What can follow but general diffolutenefs of manners ?

Nothing can more diffinftly prove the crooked politics of the Reformers than this. It may be confidered as the main-fpring of their whole machine. Their pupils were to be led by means of their fenfual appetites, and the aim of their conductors was not to inform them, but merely to lead them; not to reform, but to rule the world. —They would reign, though in hell, rather than ferve in heaven.—Dr. Bahrdt was a true Apoftle of Illuminatifm; and though his torch was made of the groffeft materials, and "ferved only to dif-" cover fights of woe," the horrid glare darted into every corner, roufing hundreds of filthy vermin, and directing their flight to the rotten carrion rion where they could beft deposit their poison and their eggs; in the breafts, to wit, of the senfual and profligate, there to fester and burst forth in a new and filthy progeny; and it is astonishing what numbers were thus roused into action. The scheme of Reading Societies had taken prodigiously, and became a very profitable part of the literary trade of Germany. The booksellers and - writers soon perceived its importance, and acted in concert.

I might fill a volume with extracts from the criticifms which were published on the Religion Edict fo often mentioned already. The Leipzig catalogue for one year contained 173. Although it concerned the Pruffian States alone, thefe appeared in every corner of Germany; nay, alfo in Holland, in Flanders, in Hungary, in Switzerland, in Courland, and in Livonia. This shows it to have been the operation of an Affociated Band, as was intimated to the King, with fo much petulance by Mirabeau. 'There was (past all doubt) fuch a combination among the innumerable fcribblers who fupplied the fairs of Leipzig and Frankfort.' Mirabeau calls it a Conjuration des Philosophes, an expression very clear to himself, for the myriads of gareteers who have long fed the craving mouth of Paris (" always thirsting after some " new thing") called themfelves philosophers, and, like the gangs of St. Giles's, converted with each other in a cant of their own, full of morale, of energie, of bienvillance, &c. &c. &c. unintelligible or mifunderstood by other men, and used for the purpose of deceit. While Mirabeau lived too, they formed a Conjuration. The 14th of July , 1790, the most folemn invocation of the Divine preience ever made on the face of this earth, put an end to the propriety of this appellation; for it became became neceffary (in the progrefs of political IIlumination) to declare that oaths were nonfenfe, because the invoked was a creature of the imagination, and the grand federation, like Wieshaupt and Bahrdt's Mafonic Christianity, is declared, to those initiated into the higher mysteries, to be a lie. But if we have no longer a Conjuration des Philosophes, we have a gang of scribblers that has got poffession of the public mind by their management of the literary Journals of Germany, and have made licentious sentiments in politics, in morals, and in religion, as familiar as were formerly the articles of ordinary news. All the fceptical writings of England put together will not make half the number that have appeared in Protestant Germany during the last twelve or fifteen years. And, in the Criticisms on the Edict, it is hard to fay whether infidelity or difloyalty fills the most pages.

To fuch a degree had the Illuminati carried this favourite and important point that they obtained the direction even of those whose office it was to prevent it. There is at Vienna, as at Berlin, an office for examining and licenfing writings before they can have their course in the market. This office publishes annually an index of forbidden books. In this index are included the account of the last Operations of Spartacus and Philo in the Order of Illuminati, and a differtation on The Final Overthrow of Free Majonry, a most excellent performance, showing the gradual corruption and final perversion of that fociety to a feminary of fedition. Also the Vienna Magazine of Litera-ture and Arts, which contains many accounts of the interferences of the Illuminati in the disturbances of Europe. The Cenfor who occasioned this prohibition was an Illuminatus named Retzer. He

CHAP. III.

He makes a most pitiful and Jesuitical defence, showing himself completely versant in all the chicane of the Illuminati, and devoted to their Infidel principles. (See Rel. Begebenh. 1795, p. 493.)

There are two performances which give us much information refpecting the flate of moral and political opinions in Germany about this time. One of them is called, Proofs of a hidden Combination to destroy the Freedom of Thought and Writing in Germany. These proofs are general, taken from many concurring circumstances in the condition of German literature. They are convincing to a thinking mind, but are too abstracted to be very impressive on ordinary readers. The other is the Appeal to my Country, which I mentioned in page 84. This is much more striking, and in each branch of literature, gives a progreffive account of the changes of fentiment, all supported by the evidence of the books themselves. The author puts it past contradiction, that in every species of literary composition into which it was poffible, without palpable abfurdity, to introduce licentious and feditious principles, it was done. Many romances, novels, journeys through Germany and other countries*, are written on purpose to attach praise or reproach to certain sentiments, characters, and pieces of conduct. The Prince, the nobleman, is made despotic, oppresfive, unfeeling or ridiculous-the poor, and the man of talents, are unfortunate and neglectedand here and there a fictitious Graff or Baron is made a divinity, by philanthropy expressed in romantic charity and kindnefs, or oftentatious indifference for the little honours which are fo precious in the eyes of a German.—In fhort, the fyftem of Weishaupt and Knigge is carried into vigorous effect over all. In both these performances, and indeed in a vast number of other pieces, I fee that the influence of Nicholai is much commented on, and confidered as having had the chief hand in all those innovations.

Thus I think it clearly appears, that the fuppreflion of the Illuminati in Bavaria and of the Union in Brandenburgh, were infufficient for removing the evils which they had introduced. The Elector of Bavaria was obliged to iffue another proclamation in November 4790, warning his fubjects of their repeated machinations, and particularly enjoining the magistrates to observe. carefully the affemblies in the Reading Societies, which were multiplying in his States. A fimilar proclamation was made and repeated by the Regency of Hanover, and it was on this occasion that Mauvillon impudently avowed the most anarchical opinions .- But Weishaupt and his agents were still bufy and successful. The habit of plotting had formed itself into a regular system. Societies now acted every where in fecret, in cor-respondence with similar societies in other places. And thus a mode of co-operation was furnished to the difcontented, the reftlefs, and the unprincipled in all places. without even the trouble of formal initiations, and without any external appearances by which the existence and occupations of the members could be diffinguished. The hydra's teeth were already fown, and each grew up, in-dependent of the rest, and soon sent out its own offsets,-In all places where fuch fecret practices were were going on, there did not fail to appear fome individuals of more than common zeal and activity, who took the lead, each in his own circle. This gave a confiftency and unity to the operations of the reft, and they, encouraged by this cooperation, could now attempt things which they would not otherwife have ventured on. It is not till this ftate of things obtains, that this influence becomes fenfible to the public. Philo, in his public declaration, unwarily lets this appear. Speaking of the numerous little focieties in which their principles were cultivated, he fays, "we thus be-" gin to be formidable." It may now alarm-but it is now too late. The fame germ is now fprouting in another place.

I must not forget to take notice that about this time (1787 or 1788,) there appeared an invitation from a Baron or Prince S-, Governor of the Dutch fortrefs H----; before the troubles in Holland, to form a fociety for the Protection of Princes. -The plan is expressed in very enigmatical terms, but such as plainly shew it to be merely, an odd title, to catch the public eye; for the Affociation is of the fame feditious kind with all those already spoken of, viz. profeffing to enlighten the minds of men, and making them imagine that all their hardships proceed from superstition, which subjects them to useless and crafty priefts; and from their own indolence and want of patriotifin, which make them fubmit to the mal-administration of ministers. The Sovereign is fupposed to be innocent, but to be a cypher, and every magistrate, who is not chosen by the people actually under him, is held to be a defpot, and is to be bound hand and foot.-Many circumflances concur to prove that the projector of this infidious plan is the Prince Salms, who fo affiduoufly fomented all the diffurbances in the Dutch and Auftrian Netherlands.

lands. He had, before this time, taken into his fervice Zwack, the Cato of the Illuminati. The project had gone fome length when it was difcovered and fupprefied by the States.

Zimmerman, who had been Prefident of the Illuminati in Manheim, was alfo a most active perfon in propagating their doctrines in other countries. He was employed as a miffionary, and erected fome Lodges even in Rome-alfo at Neufchatel-and in Hungary. He was frequently feen in the latter place by a gentleman of my acquaintance, and preached up all the oftenfible doctrines of Illuminatifm in the most public manner, and made many profelytes. But when it was discovered that the r real and fundamental doctrines were different from those which he professed in order to draw in profelytes, Zimmerman left the country in hafte.-Sonre time after this he was arrefted in Pruffia for feditious harangues-but he efcaped, and has not been heard of fince .-- When he was in Hungary he boafted of having erected above an hundred Lodges in different parts of Europe, fome of which were in England.

That the Illuminati and other hidden Cofmo-political focieties had fome influence in bringing about the French Revolution, or at leaft in accelerating it, can hardly be doubted. In reading the fecret correfpondence, I was always furprifed at not finding any reports from France, and fomething like a hefitation about eftablifhing a miffion there; nor am I yet able thoroughly to account for it. But there is abundant evidence that they interfered, both in preparing for it in the fame manner as in Germany, and in accelerating its progrefs. Some letters in the 2 K

GHAP. HE.

Brunswick Journal from one Campe, who was an infpector of the feminaries of education, a man of talents, and an Illuminatus, put it beyond doubt. He was refiding in Paris during its first movements. and gives a minute account of them, lamenting their excesses, on account of their imprudence, and the rifk of fhocking the nation, and thus deftroying the project, but justifying the motives, on the true principles of Cofmo-politifm. The Vienna Zeitichrift and the Magazine of Literature and Fine Arts for 1790, and other pamphlets of that date, fay the fame thing in a clearer manner. I shall lay together fome passages from fuch as I have met with, which I think will fhew beyond all poffibility of doubt that the Illuminati took an active part in the whole transaction, and may be faid to have been its chief contrivers. I shall premise a few observations, which will give a clearer view of the matter.

CHAP. IV.

The French Revolution.

URING these diffensions and discontents, and this general fermentation of the public mind in Germany, political occurrences in France gave exercife and full fcope for the operation of that fpirit of revolt which had long growled in fecret in the different corners of that great empire. The Cofmo-political and fceptical opinions and fentiments fo much cultivated in all the Lodges of the Philalethes had by this time been openly profeffed by many of the fages of France, and artfully interwoven with their flatifical economics. The many contefts between the King and the Parliament of Paris about the registration of his edicts, had given occasion to much difcuffion, and had made the public familiarly acquainted with topics altogether unfuitable to the abfolute monarchy of France.

This acquaintance with the natural expectations of the fubject, and the expediency of a candid attention on the part of Government to these expectations, and a view of Legislation and Government founded on a very liberal interpretation of all thefe things, was prodigioufly promoted by the rafh interference of France in the difpute between Great Britain and her colonies. In this attempt to ruin Britain, even the court of France was obliged to preach the doctrines of Liberty, and to take its chance that Frenchman would confent to be the only flaves. But their officers and foldiers, who returned from America, imported the American principles, and in every company found hearers who liftened with delight and regret to their fascinating tale of American independence. independence. During the war, the Minifter, who had too confidently pledged himfelf for the deftruction of Britain, was obliged to allow the Parifians to amufe themfelves with theatrical entertainments, where Englifh law was reprefented as oppreffion, and every fretful extravagance of the Americans was applauded as a noble ftruggle for native freedom.— All wifhed for a tafte of that liberty and equality which they were allowed to applaud on the ftage; but as foon as they came from the theatre into the ftreet, they found themfelves under all their former reftraints. The fweet charm had found its way into their hearts, and all the luxuries of France became as dull as common life does to a fond girl when fhe lays down her novel.

In this irritable flate of mind a fpark was fufficient for kindling a flame. To import this daugerous delicacy of American growth, France had expended many millions, and was drowned in debts. The mad prodigality of the Royal Family and the Court had drained the treafury, and foreflalled every livre of the revenue. The edicts for new taxes and forced loans were most unwelcome and oppreffive.

The Avocats au parlement had nothing to do with flate-affairs, being very little more than barrifters in the higheft court of juffice; and the higheft claim of the Prefidents of this court was to be a fort of humble counfellors to the King in common matters. It was a very firange inconfiftency in that ingenious nation to permit fuch people to touch on thole flatefubjects; for, in fact, the King of France was an abfolute Monarch, and the fubjects were flaves. This is the refult of all their painful refearch, notwithflanding that glimmerings of natural juffice and of freedom are to be met with in their records. There could not be found in their hiflory fo much as a tolerable account of the manner of calling calling the nation together, to learn from the people how their chains would beft pleafe their fancy. But all this was against nature, and it was necessary that it should come to an end, the first time that the monarch confessed that he could not do every thing unlefs they put the tools into his hands. As things were approaching gradually but rapidly to this condition, the impertinent interference (for fo a Frenchman, fubject of the Grand Monarch, must think it) of the advocates of the Parliament of Paris was popular in the higheft degree ; and it muft be confeffed, that in general it was patriotic, however inconfistent with the conftitution. They felt themfelves pleading the caufe of humanity and natural juffice. This would embolden honeft and worthy men to fpeak truth, however unwelcome to the court. In general, it must also be granted that they spoke with caution and with respect to the fovereign powers; and they had frequently the pleafure of being the means of mitigating the burdens of the people. The Parliament of Paris, by this conduct, came to be looked up to as a fort of mediator between the King and his fubjects; and as the avocats faw this, they naturally rofe in their own effimation far above the rank in which the conflitution of their government had placed them. For it must always be kept in mind, that the robe was never confidered as the drefs of a Nobleman, although the caffock was. An advocate was merely not a rotourier; and though we can hardly conceive a profession more truly honourable than the difpenfing of diffributive justice, nor any skill more congenial to a rational mind than that of the practical morality which we, in theory, confider as the light by which they are always conducted ; and although even the artificial conflictution of France had long been obliged to bow to the dictates of nature and humanity, and confer nobility, and even title.

title, on fuch of the professions of the municipal law as had, by their skill and their honourable character, rifen to the first offices of their profession, yet the Nobleffe de la Robe never could incorporate with the Nobleffe du Sang, nor even with the Nobleffe de l'Epee. The descendants of a Marquis de la Robe never could rife to certain dignities in the church and at court. The avocats de la parlement felt this, and fmarted under the exclusion from courthonours; and though they eagerly courted fuch nobility as they could attain, they feldom omitted any opportunity that occurred during their junior practice, of exposing the arrogance of the Noblesse, and the dominion of the court. This increased their popularity, and in the prefent fituation of things, being certain of fupport, they went beyond their former cautious bounds, and introduced in their pleadings, and particularly in their joint remonitrances against the registration of edicts, all the wiredrawn morality, and cofmo-political jurisprudence, which they had fo often rehearfed in the Lodges, and which had of late been openly preached by the economifts and philosophers.

A fignal was given to the nation for engaging "en maffe" in political difcuffion. The Notables were called upon to come and advife the King; and the points were laid before them, in which his Majefty, (infallible till now) acknowledged his ignorance or his doubts. But who were the Notables? Were they more knowing than the King, or lefs in need of inftruction? The nation thought otherwife; nay, the court thought otherwife; for in fome of the royal proclamations on this occafion, men of letters were invited to affift with their counfels, and to give what information their reading and experience fhould fuggeft as to the beft method of convoking the States General, and of conducting their deliberations. When a Minifter thus folicits folicits advice from all the world how to govern, he most assuredly declares his own incapacity, and tells the people that now they must govern themselves. This however was done, and the Minister, Neckar the Philosopher and Philanthropist of Geneva, fet the example, by fending in his opinion, to be laid on the council-table with the reft. On this fignal, counfel poured in from every garret, and the prefs groaned with advice in every fhape. Ponderous volumes were written for the Bishop or the Duke ; a handfome 8vo for the Notable Officer of eighteen; pamphlets and fingle fheets for the loungers in the Palais Royal. The fermentation was aftonishing; but it was no more than should have been expected from the most cultivated, the most ingenious, and the least bashful nation on earth. All wrote, and all read. Not contented with bringing forth all the fruits which the Illumination of these bright days of reason had raised in such abundance in the confervatories of the Philalethes, and which had been gathered from the writings of Voltaire, Diderot, Rouffeau, Raynal, &c. the patriotic counfellors of the Notables had ranfacked all the writings of former ages. They difcovered THAT FRANCE HAD ALWAYS BEEN FREE! One would have thought, that they had travelled with Sir John Mandeville in that country where even the speeches of former times had been frozen, and were now thawing apace under the beams of the fun of Reason. For many of these estays were as incongruous and mal a-propos as the broken fentences recorded by Mr. Addifon in the Spectator. A gentleman who was in Paris at this time, a perfon of great judgment, and well informed in every thing respecting the constitution and prefent condition of his country, affured me that this invitation, followed by the memorial of Mr. Neckar, operated operated like an electrical flock. In the courfe of four or five days, the appearance of Paris was completely changed. Every where one faw crowds ftaring at papers pasted on the walls-breaking into little parties-walking up and down the ftreets in eager conversation-adjourning to coffee-houses -and the conversation in all companies turned to politics alone; and in all these conversations a new vocabulary, where every fecond word was Morality, Philanthropy, Toleration, Freedom, and Equalifation of property. Even at this early period perfons were liftened to without cenfure, or even furprife, who faid that it was nonfenfe to think of reforming their government, and that it must be completely changed. In fhort, in the course of a month, a spirit of licentiousness and a rage for innovation had completely pervaded the minds of the Parifians. The most conspicuous proof of this was the unexpected fate of the Parliament. It met earlier than ufual, and to give greater eclat to its patriotic efforts, and completely to fecure the gratitude of the people, it isfued an arret on the prefent state of the nation, containing a number of refolutions on the different leading points of nas tional liberty. A few months ago thefe would have been joyfully received as the Magna Charta of Freedom, and really contained all that a wife people should defire; but because the Parliament had fometime before given it as their opinion as the conflitutional counfel of the Crown, that the States should be convoked on the principles of their last meeting in 1614, which preferved the distinctions of rank, all their past fervices were forgotten -all their hard flruggle with the former administration, and their unconquerable courage and perfeverance, which ended only with their downfal, all were forgotten: and those distinguished members members whole zeal and fufferings ranked them with the most renowed heroes and martyrs of patriotism, were now regarded as the contemptible tools of Aristocracy. The Parliament now set, in a fiery troubled sky—to rife no more.

Of all the barrifters in the Parliament of Paris, the most confpicuous for the difplay of the enchanting doctrines of Liberty and Equality was Mr. Duval, fon of an Avocat in the fame court, and ennobled about this time under the name of Defprefmenil. He was member of a Lodge of the Amis Reunis at Paris, called the Contract Social, and of the Lodge of Chevaliers Bienfaifants at Lyons. His reputation as a barrifter had been prodigioufly increafed about this time by his management of a cause, where the descendant of the unfortunate General Lally, after having obtained the reftoration of the family honours, was striving to get back fome of the eftates. Mr. Lally Tollendahl had even trained himfelf to the profeffion, and pleaded his own caufe with aftonishing abilities. But Defpresmenil had near connections with the family which was in possession of the eftates, and opposed him with equal powers, and more address. He was on the fide which was most agreeable to his favourite topics of declamation, and his pleadings attracted much notice both in Paris and in fome of the provincial Parliaments. I mention these things with some interest, because this was the beginning of that marked rivalfhip between Lally Tollendahl and Defprefmenil, which made such a figure in the Journals of the National Affembly. It ended fatally for both. Lally Tollendahl was obliged to quit the Affembly, when he faw it determined on the destruction of the monarchy and of all civil order, and at last to emigrate from his country with the lofs of all his 2 L property, property, and to fubfift on the kindnefs of England. Diepresmenil attained his meridian of popularity by his difcovery of the fecret plan of the Court to establish the Cour pleniere, and ever after this took the lead in all the ftrong measures of the Parliament of Paris, which was now overstepping all bounds of moderation or propriety, in hopes of preferving its influence after it had rendered itfelf impotent by an unguarded stroke. Desprefmenil was the first martyr of that Liberty and Equality which it was now boldly preaching, having voluntarily furrendered himfelf a prifoner to the officer fent to demand him from the Parliament. He was alfo a martyr to any thing that remained of the very shadow of liberty after the Revolution, being guillotined by Robefpierre.

I have already mentioned the intrigues of Count Mirabeau at the Court of Berlin, and his feditious preface and notes on the anonymous letters on the Rights of the Prussian States. He alfo, while at Berlin, published an Effai fur la Secte des Illumines, one of the strangest and most impudent performances that ever appeared. He there defcribes a fect exifting in Germany, called the Illuminated, and fays, that they are the most abfurd and grofs fanatics imaginable, waging war with every appearance of Reafon, and maintaining the most ridiculous superstitions. He gives fome account of these, and of their rituals, ceremonies, &c. as if he had feen them all. His fect is a confused mixture of Christian superstitions, Rofycrucian nonfenfe, and every thing that can raile contempt and hatred. But no fuch Society ever existed, and Mirabeau confided in his own powers of deception, in order to screen from obfervation those who were known to be Illuminati, and to hinder the rulers from attending to their real real machinations, by means of this Ignis fatuus of his own brain. He knew perfectly that the Illuminati were of a ftamp diametrically oppofite; for he was illuminated by Mauvillon long before. He gained his point in fome meafure, for Nicholai and others of the junto immediately adopted the whim, and called them Obfcurantem, and joined with Mirabeau in placing on the lift of Obfcurantem feveral perfons whom they wifhed to make ridiculous.

Mirabeau was not more difcontented with the Court of Berlin for the small regard it had testified for his eminent talents, than he was with his own Court, or rather with the minister Calonne, who had fent him thither. Calonne had been greatly diffatisfied with his conduct at Berlin, where his felf-conceit, and his private projects, had made him act in a way almost contrary to the purposes of his mission. Mirabeau was therefore in a rage at the minister, and published a pamphlet, in which his celebrated 'memorial on the ftate of the nation, and the means of relieving it, was treated with the utmost feverity of reproach; and in this contest his mind was wrought up to that violent pitch of opposition which he ever after maintained. To be noticed, and to lead, were his fole objects-and he found, that taking the fide of the difcontented was the bell field for his eloquence and reftlefs ambition .--- Yet there was no man that was more devoted to the principles of a court than count Mirabeau, provided he had a fhare in the administration; and he would have obtained it, if any thing moderate would have fatisfied him—but he thought nothing worthy of him but a place of active truft, and a high department. For fuch offices all knew him to be totally unfit. He wanted knowledge of great things, and and was learned only in the buffling detail of intrigue, and at any time would facrifice every thing to have an opportunity of exercifing his brilliant eloquence, and indulging his paffion for fatire and reproach .- The greatest obstacle to his advancement was the abject worthleffirefs of his character. What we usually call profligacy, viz. debauchery, gaming, impiety, and every kind of fenfuality, were not enough-he was deflitute of decency in his vices-tricks which would difgrace a thief-catcher, were never boggled at in order to fupply his expences. For instance,-His father and mother had a process of feparation-Mirabeau had just been liberated from prison for a gross misdemeanour, and was in want of money-He went to his father, fided with him in invectives against his mother, and, for 100 guineas, wrote his father's memorial for the court .-- He then went to his mother, and by a fimilar conduct got the fame fum from her-and both memorials were prefented. Drinking was the only vice in which he did not indulge-his exhausted constitution did not permit it. His brother, the Vifcount, on the contrary, was apt to exceed in jollity. One day the Count faid to him, "How can you, Brother, fo "expose yourself?"---" What!" fays the Vifcount, " how infatiable you are ---- Nature has " given you every vice, and having left me only this one, you grudge it me."-When the elections were making for the States-General, he offered himself a candidate in his own order at Aix -But he was so abhorred by the Noblesse, that they not only rejected him but even drove him from their meetings. This affront fettled his meafures, and he determined on their ruin. He went to the Commons, difclaimed his being a gentleman, fat up a little shop in the market place of Aix

CHAP. IV. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

Aix, and fold triffes—and now, fully refolved what line he fhould purfue, he courted the Commons, by joining in all their exceffes against the Noblesse, and was at last returned a member of the Assembly.

From this account of Mirabeau we can eafily foretel the use he would make of the Illumination which he had received in Germany. Its grand truths and just morality feem to have had the fame effects on his mind as on that of Weishaupt or Bahrdt.

In the year 1-68, Mirabeau, in conjunction with the duke de Lauzun and the Abbe Perigord, afterwards Bishop of Autun (the man so puffed in the National Assemblies as the brightest pattern of humanity) reformed a Lodge of Philalethes in Paris, which met in the Jacobin College or Con-vent. It was one of the Amis Reunis, which had now rid itself of all the infignificant mysticism of the sect. This was now become troublesome, and took up the time which would be much better employed by the Chevaliers du Soliel, and other still more refined champions of reason and universal citizenship. Mirabeau had imparted to it fome of that Illumination which had beamed upon him when he was in Berlin. In 1788, he and the Abbe were wardens of the lodge. They found that they had not acquired all the dexterity of management that he underftood was practifed by his Brethren in Germany, for keeping up their connection, and conducting their corespondence. A letter was therefore fent from this Lodge, fign-ed by these two gentlemen, to the Brethren in Germany, requesting their assistance and instruction. In the courfe of this year, and during the fitting of the Notables, A DEPUTATION WAS SENT from the German Illuminati to catch this glorious ous opportunity of carrying their plan into full execution with the greatest eclat.

Nothing can more convincingly demonstrate the early intentions of a party, and this a great party, in France to overturn the conftitution completely, and plant a democracy or oligarchy on its ruins. The Illuminati had no other object .---They accounted all Princes usurpers and tyrants, and all privileged orders their abettors. They intended to establish a government of Morality, as they called it, (Sittenregiment) where talents and character (to be estimated by their own scale, and by themfelves) fhould alone lead to preferment. They meant to abolish the laws which protected . property accumulated by long continued and fuccessful industry, and to prevent for the future any fuch accumulation. They intended to establish univerfal Liberty and Equality, the imprefcriptible Rights of Man, (at least they pretended all this to those who were neither Magi or Regentes.) And, as neceffary preparations for all this, they intended to root out all religion and ordinary morality, and even to break the bonds of domeftic life, by deftroying the veneration for marriagevows, and by taking the education of children out of the hands of the parents. This was all that the Illuminati could teach, and THIS WAS PRE-CISELY WHAT FRANCE HAS DONE.

I cannot proceed in the narration without defiling the page with the detefted name of Orleans, ftained with every thing that can degrade or difgrace human nature. He only wanted Illumination, to fhew him in a fyftem all the opinions, difpofitions, and principles which filled his own wicked heart. This contemptible being was illuminated by Mirabeau, and has thown himfelf the moft zealous difciple of the Order. In his oath of allegiance he declares declares, " That the interefts and the object of the " Order shall be rated by him above all other rela-"tions, and that he will ferve it with his honour, "his fortune, and his blood."—He has kept his word, and has facrificed them all—And he has been treated in the true fpirit of the Order—ufed as a mere tool, cheated and ruined.—For I muft now add, that the French borrowed from the Illuminatia maxim, unheard of in any other affociation of ban-ditti, viz. that of cheating each other. As the ma-nagers had the fole poffession of the higher mysteries, and led the reft by principles which they held to be falfe, and which they employed only for the purpofe of fecuring the co-operation of the inferior Brethren, fo Mirabeau, Siéyes, Pethion, and others, led the Duke of Orleans at first by his wicked ambition, and the expectation of obtaining that crown which they intended to break in pieces, that they might get the use of his immense fortune, and of his influence on the thousands of his depending fycophants, who ate his bread and pandered to his gross appetites. Although we very foon find him acting as an Illuminatus, we cannot fuppose him fo loft to common fense as to contribute his fortune, and rifk his life, merely in order that the one fhould be afterwards taken from him by law, and the other put on a level with that of his groom or his pimp. He furely hoped to obtain the crown of his indolent relation. And indeed Mirabeau faid to Bergaffe, that "when the project was mentioned to the Duke " of Orleans, he received it with all poffible gra-" cioufnefs," (avec toute la grace imaginable.) Dur-ing the contefts between the Court and the Parliament of Paris, he courted popularity with an indecency and folly that nothing can explain but a mad and fiery ambition which blinded his eyes to all confequences. This is put out of doubt by his behavi-

our at Verfailles on the dreadful 5th and 6th of October, 1789. The depositions at the Chatelet prove in the most incontestible manner, that during the horrors of those two days he was repeatedly feen, and that whenever he was recognized by the crowd, he was huzzaed with Vive Orleans, Vive notre Roi Orleans, &c.-He then withdrew, and was feen in other places. While all about the unfortunate Royal Family were in the utmost concern for their fate, he was in gay humour, chatting on indifferent fubjects. His laft appearance in the evening of the 5th was about nine o'clock, converfing in a corner with men difguifed in mean drefs, and fome in women's clothes; among whom were Mirabeau, Barnave, Duport, and other deputies of the Republican party -and these men were seen immediately after, concealed among the lines of the regiment de Flandre, the corruption of which they had that day compleated. He was feen again next morning, converfing with the fame perfons in women's drefs. And when the infulted Sovereign was dragged in triumph to Paris, Orleans was again feen skulking in a balcony behind his children, to view the procession of devils and furies; anxioufly hoping all the while that fome disturbance would arife in which the King might perifh.-I fhould have added that he was feen in the morning at the top of the ftairs, pointing the way with his hand to the mob, where they should go, while he went by another road to the King. In fhort, he went about trembling like a coward, waiting for the explosion which might render it fafe for him to fhew himfelf. Mirabeau faid of him, "The fellow carries a loaded piftol in his bosom, but will never dare to pull the trigger." He was faved, notwithstanding his own folly, by being joined in the acculation with Mirabeau, who could not refcue himfelf without striving also for Orleans, whom he defpifed, pifed, while he made use of his fortune.—In short, Orleans was but half illuminated at this time, and hoped to be King or Regent.

Yet he was deeply verfed in the preparatory lef-fons of Illuminatifm, and well convinced of its fundamental truths. He was well affured of the great influence of the women in fociety, and he employed this influence like a true disciple of Weishaupt.-Above three hundred nymphs from the purlieus of the Palais Royal were provided with ecus and Louis d'ors, by his grand procureur the Abbe Sieyes, and were fent to meet and to illuminate the two battalions of the Regiment de Flandre, who were coming to Verfailles for the protection of the Royal Family. The privates of one of these regiments came and informed their officers of this attempt made on their loyalty.-45,000l. livres were given them at St. Denys, to make them difband themfelves-and the poor lads were at first dazzled by the name of a fum that was not familiar to them-but when fome thinking head among them told them that it only amounted to two Louis d'ors a piece, they difclosed the bribery. They were then offered 90,000, but never faw it. (Depositions at, the Chatelet No. 317.) Mademoifelle Therouane, the favorita of the day, at the Palais Royal, was the most active perfon of the armed mob from Paris, dreffed en Amazonne, with all the elegance of the opera, and turned many young heads that day which were afterwards taken off by the guillotine. The Duke of Orleans acknowledged, before his death, that he had expended above 50,000l. sterling in corrupting the Gardes Francoifes. The armed mob which came from Paris to Versailles on the 5th of October, importuning the King for bread, had their pockets filled with crown piecesand Orleans was seen on that day by two gendemen, with a bag of money fo heavy that it was fastened to 2 M his his clothes with a flrap, to hinder it from being oppreffive, and to keep it in fuch a polition that, it fhould be acceffible in an inflant. (See the Depolitions at the Chatelet, No. 177.)

But fuch was the contempt into which his grofs profligacy, his cowardice, and his niggardly difpolition, had brought him with all parties, that, if he had not been quite blinded by his wicked ambition, and by his implacable refertment of fome bitter taunts he had gotten from the King and Queen, he must have teen very early that he was to be facrificed as foon as he had ferved the purpofes of the faction. At prefent, his affiftance was of the utmost confequence. His immense fortune, much above three millions sterling, was almost exhausted during the three first years of the Revolution. But (what was of more confequence) he had almost unbounded authority among the Free Masons.

In this country we have no conception of the authority of a National Grand Master. When Prince Ferdinand of Brunfwick, by great exertions among the jarring fects in Germany, had got himfelf elected Grand Master of the Striet Observanz, it gave ferious alarm to the Emperor, and to all the Princes of Germany, and contributed greatly to their connivance at the attempts of the Illuminati to diferedit that party. In the great cities of Germany, the inhabitants paid more respect to the Grand Mafter of the Mafons than to their refpective Princes. The authority of the D. of Orleans in France was fill greater, in confequence of his employing his fortune to support it. About eight years before the Revolution he had (not without much intrigue and many bribes and promifes) been elected Grand Mafter of France, having under his directions all the Improved Lodges. The whole Affociation was called the Grand Orient de 1a la France, and in 1785 contained 266 of thefe Lodges; (fee Freymaurerische Zeitung, Neuwied 1787.) Thus he had the management of all those Secret Societies; and the licentious and irreligious fentiments which were currently preached there, were fore of his hearty concurrence. The fame intrigue which procured him the fupreme chair, must have filled the Lodges with his dependents and emissaries, and these men could not better earn their pay, than by doing their utmost to propagate infidelity, immorality, and impurity of manners.

But fomething more was wanted : Difrefpect for the higher Orders of the State, and difloyalty to the Sovereign.-It is not fo eafy, to conceive how these fentiments, and particularly the latter, could meet with toleration, and even encouragement, in a nation noted for its professions of veneration for its Monarch, and for the pride of its Nobleffe. Yet I am certain that fuch doctrines were habitually preached in the Lodges of Philalethes, and Amis Reunis de la Verite. That they should be very current in Lodges of low-born Literati, and other Brethren in inferior stations, is natural, and I have already faid enough on this head. But the French Lodges contained many gentlemen in eafy, and affluent circumftances. I do not expect fuch confidence in my affertions, that even in these the same opinions were very prevalent. I was therefore much pleafed with a piece of information which I got while thefe fheets were printing off, which corroborates my affertions.

This is a performance called La voile retiree, ou le Secret de la Revolution'explique par la Franc Maconnerie. It was written by a Mr. Lefranc, Prefident of the Seminary of the Eudifts at Caen in Normandy, and a fecond edition was published at Paris in 1792.

1792. The author was butchered in the maffacre of September. He fays, that on the death of a friend, who had been a very zealous Mafon, and many years Master of a respectable Lodge, he found among his papers a collection of Mafonic writings, containing the rituals, catechifms, and fymbols of every kind, belonging to a long train of degrees of Free Mafonry, together with many discourses delivered in different Lodges, and minutes of their proceedings. The perufal filled him with aftonishment and anxiety. For he found that doctrines were taught, and maximis of conduct were inculcated, which were fubverfive of religion and of all good order in the flate; and which not only countenanced difloyalty and fedition, but even invited to it. He thought them fo dangerous to the flate, that he fent an account of them to the Archbishop of Paris long before the Revolution, and always hoped that that Reverend Prelate would reprefent the matter to his Majefty's Miniflers, and that they would put an end to the meetings of this dangerous Society, or would at least restrain them from fuch exceffes. But he was difappointed, and therefore thought it his duty to lay them before the public*.

Mr. Lefranc fays expressly, that this shocking perversion of Free Masonry to seditious purposes

* Had the good man been spared but a few months, his furprife at this neglect would have ceased. For, on the 19th of November 1793, the Archbishop of Paris came to the Bar of the Affembly, accompanied by his Vicar and eleven other Clergymen, who there renounced their Christianity and their clerical vows; acknowledging that they had played the villain for many years against their conficiences, teaching what they knew to be a lie, and were now refolyed to be honest men. The Vicar indeed had behaved like a true Illuminatus fome time before, by running off with another man's wife and his strong box.—None of them, however, feem to have attained the higher mysteries, for they were all guillotined not long after.

was, in a great measure, but a late thing, and was chiefly brought about by the agents of the Grand Master, the Duke of Orleans. He was, however, of opinion that the whole Masonic Fraternity was hostile to Christianity and to good morals, and that it was the contrivance of the great schismatic Faustus Socinus, who being terrified by the fate of Servetus, at Geneva, fell on this method of promulgating his doctrines among the great in fecret. This opinion is but ill supported, and is incompatible with many circumstances in Free Masonry-But it is out of our way at prefent. Mr. Lefranc then takes particular notice of the many degrees of Chivalry cultivated in the Lodges, and shows how, by artful changes in the fuccessive explanations of the same symbols, the doctrines of Chriftianity, and of all revealed religion, are completely exploded, and the Philosophe Inconnu be. comes at last a professed Atheist.-He then takes notice of the political doctrines which are in like manner gradually unfolded, by which " patriot-" ifm and loyalty to the prince are declared to be " narrow principles, inconfistent with universal " benevolence, and with the native and impre-for iptible rights of man; civil fubordination is " actual oppression, and Princes are ex officio usur-" pers and tyrants." These principles he fairly deduces from the Catechifms of the Chevalier du Soliel, and of the Philosophe Inconnu. He then proceeds to notice more particularly the intrigues of the Duke of Orleans. From these it appears evident that his ambitious views and hopes had been of long standing, and that it was entirely by his fupport and encouragement that seditious doctrines were permitted in the Lodges. Many noblemen and gentlemen were difgusted and left thefe Lodges, and advantage was taken of their abfence absence to improve the Lodges still more, that is to make them still more anarchical and feditious. Numbers of paltry feribblers who haunted the Palace Royal, were admitted into the Lodges, and there vented their poifonous doctrines. The Duke turned his chief attention to the French guards, introducing many of the privates and inferior officers into the obfcure and even the more refpectable Lodges, fo that the officers were frequently difgusted in the Lodges by the infolent behaviour of their own foldiers under the mafk of Mafonic Brotherhood and Equality-and this behaviour became not unfrequent even out of doors. He afferts with great confidence that the troops were much corrupted by these intrigues-and that when they fometimes declared, on fervice, that they would not fire on their Brethren, the phrase had a particular reference to their Masonic Fraternity, becaufe they recognifed many of their Brother Mafons in every crowd.—And the corruption was by no means confined to Paris and its neighbourhood, but extended to every place in the kingdom where there was a Municipality and a Mafon Lodge.

Mr. Lefranc then turns our attention to many peculiarities in the Revolution, which have a refemblance to the practices in Free Mafonry. Not only was the arch rebel the Duke of Orleans, the Grand Mafter, but the chief actors in the Revolution, Mirabeau, Condorcet, Rochefoucault, and others, were diffinguished office-bearers in the great Lodges. He fays that the diffribution of France into departments, diffricts, circles, cantons, &c. is perfectly fimilar, with the fame denominations, to a diffribution which he had remarked in the correspondence of the Grand Orient[#].

CHAP. IV. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

ent*. The Prefident's hat in the National Affembly is copied from that of a Tres Venerable Grand Maitre.—The fcarf of a Municipal Officer is the fame with that of a Brother Apprentice.--Whenthe Affembly celebrated the Revolution in the, Cathedral, they accepted of the highest honours of Mafonry by passing under the Arch of Steel, formed by the drawn fwords of two ranks of Brethren .- Alfo it is worthy of remark, that the National Affembly protected the meetings of Free Mafons, while it preremptorily prohibited every other private meeting. The obligation of laying afide all ftars, ribbands, croffes, and other honourable distinctions, under the pretext of Fraternal Equality, was not merely a prelude, but was intended as a preparation for the destruction of all civil diftinctions, which took place almost at the beginning of the Revolution, -and the first proposal of a surrender, fays Mr. Lefranc, was made by a zealous Majon.-He farther observes, that the horrible and fanguinary oaths, the daggers, death-heads, crofs-bones, the imaginary combats with the murderers of Hiram, and many other gloomy ceremonies, have a natural tendency to harden the heart, to remove its natural difgust at deeds of horror, and have paved the way for those flocking barbarities which have made the name of Frenchmen abhorred over all Europe. Thefe deeds were indeed perpetrated by a mob of fanatics; but the principles were promulgated and foftered by perfons who ftyle themfelves philofophers.

I see more evidence of these important facts in another book just published by an emigrant gentleman (Mr. Latocnaye). He confirms my repeated affertions, that all the irreligious and feditious doctrines were the fubjects of repeated harangues in the Mason Lodges, and that all the principles of the Revolution, by which the public mind was as it were set on fire, were nothing but enthusiastic amplifications of the common-place cant of . Free Mafonry, and arofe naturally out of it. He even thinks "that this must of necessity be the cafe " in every country where the minds of the lower " claffes of the State are in any way confiderably " fretted or irritated; it is almost impossible to " avoid being drawn into this vortex, whenever " a discontented mind entersinto a Mason Lodge. " The stale story of brotherly love, which at an-" other time would only lull the hearer afleep. " now makes him prick up his ears, and liften " with avidity to the filly tale, and he cannot " hinder fretting thoughts from continually rank-" ling in his mind."

* I cannot help obferving, that it is perfectly fimilar to the arrangement and denominations which appear in the fecret correfpondence of the Bavarian Illuminati.

Mr. Latocnaye fays expressly, " That not with-" ftanding the general contempt of the public for " the Duke of Orleans, his authority as Grand " Master of the Masons gave him the greatest opportunity that a feditious mind could defire 66 for helping forward the Revolution. He had 66 ready to his hand a connected fystem of hidden 66 " Societies, protected by the State, habituated to " fecrecy and artifice, and already tinged with " the very enthusias he wished to inspire. In 66 these heformed political committees, into which only his agents were admitted. He filled the " " Lodges with the French guards, whom he cor-66 rupted with money and hopes of preferment; 66 and by means of the Abbe Sieyes, and other 66 emiffaries, they were harangued with all the fo-٢, phistical declamation, or cant of Masonry."

Mr. Latocnaye fays, that all this was peculiar to the Lodges of the Grand Orient; but that there were many (not very many, if we judge by the Neuwied almanac, which reckons only 289 in all France in 1784, of which 266 were of the Grand Orient) Lodges who continued on the old plan of amufing themfelves with a little folemn trifling. He coincides with Mr. Lefranc in the opinion that the awful and gloomy rituals of Mafonry, and particularly the fevere trials of confidence and fubmiffion, must have a great tendency to harden the heart, and fit a man for attrocious actions. No one can doubt of this who reads the following inflance :

" A candidate for reception into one of the " higheft Orders, after having heard many threat-" enings denounced against all who should betray " the Secrets of the Order, was conducted to a " place where he faw the dead bodies of feveral " who were faid to have fuffered for their trea-" chery. He then faw his own brother tied hand " and foot; begging his mercy and interceffion. " He was informed that this perfon was about to " fuffer the punishment due to this offence, and " that it was referved for him (the candidate) to " be the inftrument of this just vengeance, and " that this gave him an opportunity of manifest-" ing that he was completely devoted to the Or-" der. It being observed that his countenance " gave figns of inward horror, (the perfon in bonds imploring his mercy all the while) he " was told that in order to fpare his feelings, a " bandage should be put over his eyes. A dagger " was then put into his right hand, and being " hood-winked, his left hand was laid upon the " palpitating heart of the criminal, and he was " then ordered to strike. He instantly obeyed ; " and when the bandage was taken from his eyes, 2 Nhe

" he faw that it was a lamb that he had stabbed. " Surely fuch trials and fuch wanton cruelty arc " fit only for training confpirators."

Mr. Latocnaye adds, that "when he had been " initiated, an old gentleman afked him what he " thought of the whole ?" He answered, " A great " deal of noife, and much nonfenfe." " Nonfenfe." faid the other, " don't judge fo rally, young man; " I have worked these twenty-five years, and the " farther I advanced, it interested me the more; " but I flopped fhort, and nothing fhall prevail on " me to advance a step farther." In another converfation the gentleman faid, "I imagine that my " ftoppage was owing to my refufal about nine years " ago, to liften to fome perfors who made to me, " out of the Lodge, propofals which were feditious " and horrible; for ever fince that time I have re-" marked, that my higher Brethren treat me with a " much greater referve than they had done before, " and that, under the pretext of further inftruction; " they have laboured to confute the notions which " I had already acquired, by giving fome of the " most delicate subjects a different turn. I faw " that they wanted to remove fome fufpicions which " I was beginning to form concerning the ultimate " fcope of the whole."

I imagine that these observations will leave no doubt in the mind of the reader with refpect to the influence of the fecret Fraternity of Free Mafonry in the French Revolution, and that he will allow it to be highly probable that the infamous Duke of Orleans had, from the beginning, entertained hopes of mounting the throne of France. It is not my province to prove or difprove this point, only I think it no lefs evident, from many circumftances in the tranfactions of those tumultuous days, that the active leaders had quite different views, and were impelled impelled by fanatical notions of democratic felicity, or, more probably, by their own ambition to be the movers of this vaft machine, to overturn the ancient government, and erect a republic, of which they hoped to be the managers^{*}. Mirabeau had learned when in Germany that the principles of anarchy had been well digefted into a fyftem, and therefore withed for fome inftruction as to the fubordinate detail of the bufinefs, and for this purpofe requefted a deputation from the Illuminati.

In fuch a caufe as this, we may be certain that no ordinary perfon would be fent. One of the deputies was Amelius, the next perfon in the order to Spartacus and Philo. His worldly name was Johann. J. C. Bode, at Weimar, privy-counfellor to the Prince of Heffe-Darmftadt. (See Fragmente der Biographie des verstorbenes Freyberr Bode in Weimar, mit zuverlassigen Urkunder, 8vo. Riom. 1795. See alfo Endliche Shickfall der Freymaurerey, 1794; alfo Wiener Zeitfchrift fur 1793.)—This perfon has played a principal part in the whole fcheme of Illumination. He was a perfon of confiderable and fhowy talents as a writer. He had great talents for conversation, and had kept good company. With respect to his mystical character, his experience was great. He was one of the Templar Masons, and among them was Eques a Liliis Convallium. He had fpeculated much about the origin and hiftory of Mafonry, and when at the Willemsbad convention, was converted to Illuminatifm. He was the great inftigator of Nicholai, Gedicke, and Biefter, to the hunt after Jefuits which fo much occupied them, and fuggested to Nicholai his journey through Germany. Leuchtfenring whom I mentioned before, was only the letter-carrier between Bode and thefe three authors. He was just fuch a man as Weishaupt wilhed for; his head filled with Mafonic fanaticifm, attaching infinite importance to the frivolities of Mafonry, and engaged in an enthufiaftic and fruitlefs refearch after its origin and hiftory. He had collected, however, fuch a number of archives (as they were called) of Free Mafonry, that he fold his mannfcript to the Duke of Saxe Gotha, (into whofe fervice Weithaupt engaged himfelf when he was driven from Bavaria), for 150 dahlers. This little anecdote fhows the high importance attributed to those matters by perfons of whom we fhould expect better things. Bode was also a most determined and violent materialist. Besides all these qualities, foacceptable to the Illuminati, he was a difcontented Templar Mafon, having been repeatedly difappointed of the preferment which he thought himfelf entitled to. When he learned that the first operations of the Illuminati were to be the obtaining the fole direction of the Mafon Lodges, and of the whole Fraternity, his hopes revived of rifing to fome of the Commanderies, which his enthufiafm, or rather fanaticifm, had made him hope to fee one day regained by the Order :- but when he found that the next and favourite object was to root out the Strift Obfervanz altogether, he flarted back. But Philo faw that the understanding understanding (shall we call it?) that can be dazzled with one whim, may be dazzled with another, and he now attached him to Illuminatifm, by a magnificent difplay of a world ruled by the Order, and conducted to happiness by means of Liberty and Equality. This did the bufinefs, as we fee by the private correspondence, where Philo informs Spartacus of his first difficulties with Amelius. Amelius was gained over in August 1782, and we fee by the fame correspondence, that the greatest affairs were foon entrutted to him-he was generally employed to deal with the great. When a Graf or a Baron was to be wheedled into the Order, Amelius was the agent.-He was also the chief operator in all their contests with the Jesuits and the Rofycrucians. It was also Bode that procured the important acceffion of Nicholai to the Order. This he brought about through Leuchtfenring; and laftly, his numerous connections among the Free Mafons, together with Knigge's influence among them, enabled the Illuminati to worm themfelves into every Lodge, and at last gave them almost the entire command of the Fraternity.

* The depositions at the Chatelet, which I have already quoted, give repeated and unequivocal proofs, that he, with a confiderable number of the deputies of the National Affembly, had formed this plot before the 5th of October 1789. That trial was conducted in a ftrange manner, partly out of respect for the Royal Family, which still had some hearts affectionately attached to it, and to the monarchy, and partly by reason of the fears of the members of this court. There was now no fastery for any person who differed from the opinion of the frantic populace of Paris. The chief points of accusation were written in a fchedule which is not published, and the witness were ordered to depose on these in one general Yes or No; fo that it is only the leass important part of the evidence that has been printed. I am well informed that the whole of it is carefully preferved, and will one day appear.

Such was the first of the deputies to France. The other was a Mr. Buffche, called in the Order Bayard; therefore probably a man of respectable character; for most of Spartacus's names were fignificant like his own. He was a military man, Lieutenant-Colonel in the fervice of riestie Darmstadt.— This man also was a discontented Templar Mason, and his name in that Fraternity had been Eques a Fontibus Eremi. He was illuminated by Knigge. He had also been unfuccessful both at court and in the field, in both of which figures he had been attempting to make a distinguished figure. He, as well as Bode, were immersed in debts. They were therefore fore just in the proper temper for Cosmo-political enterprise.

They went to Paris in the end of 1788, while the Notables were fitting, and all Paris was giving advice. The alarm that was raifed about Animal Magnetifm, which was indeed making much noife at that time, and particularly at Paris, was affigned by them as the great motive of the journey. Bode alfo faid that he was anxious to learn what were the corrections made on the fystem of the Chevaliers Bienfaifants. They had taken that name at first, to fcreen themfelves from the charges against them under the name of Templars. They had corrected fomething in their fystem when they took the name Philalethes. And now when the Schifms of the Philalethes were healed, and the Brethren again united under the name of Amis Reunis, he fufpected that Jefuits had interfered ; and becaufe he had heard that the principles of the Amis Reunis were very noble, he willied to be more certain that they were purged of every thing Jefuitical.

The deputies accordingly arrived at Paris, and immediately obtained admiffion into these two Fraternities*. They found both of them in the ripest flate for Illumination, having fhaken off all the cabaliftical, chemical, and myflical whims that had formerly diffurbed them, and would now take up too much of their time. They were now cultivating with great zeal the philofophico political doctrines of univerfal citizenfhip. Their leaders, to the number of twenty, are mentioned by name in the Berlin Monatfchrift for 1785, and among them are feveral of the first actors in the French Revolution. But this is nothing diffinctive, because perfons of all opinions were Masons.

The Amis Reunis were little behind the Illuminati in every thing that was irreligious and anarchical, and had no inclination for any of the formalities of ritual, &c. They were already fit for the higher mysteries, and only wanted to learn the methods of bulinefs which had fucceeded fo well in fpreading their doctrines and maxims over Germany. Belides, their doctrines had not been digested into a fyftem, nor had the artful methods of leading on the pupils from bad to worfe been practifed. For hitherto, each individual had vented in the Lodges his own opinions, to unburden his own mind, and the Brethren liftened for instruction and mutual encouragement. Therefore, when Spartacus's plan was communicated to them, they faw at once its importance, in all its branches, fuch as the use of the Mafon Lodges, to fifh for Minervals-the rituals and ranks to entice the young, and to lead them by degrees to opinions and measures which, at first fight, would have flocked them. The firm hold which is gotten of the pupils, and indeed of all the inferior claffes, by their reports in the course of their pretended training in the knowledge of themfelves and of other men-and, above all, the provincial arrangement of the order, and the clever fubordination and entire dependence on a felect band or Pandæmonium at Paris.

Paris, which fhould infpire and direct the whole.-I think (altho' I have not express affertions of the fact) from the fublequent conduct of the French revolters, that even at this early period, there were many in those focieties who were ready to go every length propofed to them by the Illuminati, fuch as the abolition of royalty, and of all privileged orders, as tyrants by nature, the annihilation and robbery of the priesthood, the rooting out of Christianity, and the introduction of Atheilm, or a philosophical chimera which they were to call Religion. Mirabeau had often spoken of the last branch of the Illuminated principles, and the conversations held at Versailles during the awful paufes of the 5th of October, (which are to be feen in the evidence before the Chatelet in the Orleans process,) can hardly be fuppofed to be the fancies of an accidental mob.

Mirabeau was, as I have faid, at the head of this democratic party, and had repeatedly faid; that the only use of a King was to ferve as a pageant, in order to give weight to public measures in the opinion of the populace .- And Mr. Latocnaye fays, that this party was very numerous, and that immediately after the imprudent or madlike invitation of every fcribbler in a garret to give his advice, the party did not fcruple to fpeak their fentiments in public, and that they were encouraged in their encomiums on the advantages of a virtuous republican government by Mr. Neckar, who had a most extravagant and childish predilection for the conflitution of Geneva, the place of his nativity, and was also much tinged with the Cosmo-political philosophy of the times. The King's brothers, and the Princes of the blood, prefented a memorial to his Majesty, which concluded by faying, that "the effervefence of the " public opinions had come to fuch a height that " the

the most dangerous principles, imported from foreign parts, were avowed in print with perfect impunity—that his majesty had unwarily encouraged every fanatic to dictate to him, and to spread his poisonous sentiments, in which the rights of the throne were not only difrespected, but were even disputed—that the rights of the higher classes in the state ran a great risk of being speedily suppressed, and that nothing would hinder the facred right of property from being ere long invaded, and the unequal distribution of wealth from being thought a proper fubject of reform."

When such was the state of things in Paris; it is plain that the bufiness of the German deputies would be eafily transacted. They were received with open arms by the Philalethes, the Amis de la Verite, the Social Contract, &c. and in the course of a very few weeks in the end of 1788, and the beginning of 1789, (that is, before the end of March) the whole of the Grand Orient, including the Philalethes, Amis Reunis, Martiniftes, &c. had the fecrets of Illumination communicated to them. The operation naturally began with the Great National Lodge of Paris, and those in immediate dependence on it. It would also feem, from many circumstances that occurred to my obfervation, that the Lodges in Alface and Lorraine were Illuminated at this time, and not long before as I had imagined. Strafburg I know had been Illuminated long ago, while Philo was in the Order. A circumstance strikes me here as of fome moment. The fects of Philalethes, and Amis Reunis were refinements engrafted on the fystem of the Chevaliers Beinfailants at Lyons. Such refinements never fail to be confidered as a fort of herefy, and the profeffors will be held with a jealous $2 | \Omega$

lous and unfriendly eye by fome, who will pride themfelves on adhering to the old faith. And the greater the fuccefs of the herefy, the greater will be the animofity between the parties.—May not this help to explain the nutual hatred of the Parifians and the Lyonuois, which produced the most dreadful attrocities ever perpetrated on the face of the earth, and made a shambles and a defert of the finest city of France?

The first proceeding by the advice of the deputies was the formation of a political committee in every Lodge. This committee corresponded with the distant Lodges, and in it were discussed and fettled all the political principles which were to be inculcated on the members. The author of the Neuesse Arbeitung fays expressly, that " he " was thoroughly instructed in this; that it was " given in charge to these committees to frame " general rules, and to carry through the great " plan (grand auvre) of a general overturning " of religion and government." The principal leaders of the inblequent Revolution were members of these committees. Here were the plans laid, and they were transimitted through the kingdom by the Corresponding Committees.

Thus were the flupid Bavarians (as the French were once pleafed to call them) their infructors in the art of overturning the world. The French were indeed the first who put it in practice. These committees arose from the Illuminati in Bavaria, who had by no means given over working; and these committees produced the Jacobin Club. It is not a frivolous remark, that the Masonic phrase of the perfons who wish to address the Brethren, " (F. S. je demande la parole, which the F. S. re-" ports to the V. G. M. and which he announces " to the Brethren thus, " Mes freres, frere tel " demande

" demande la parole, la parole lui est accordee,") is exactly copied by the Jacobin Club. There is furely no natural connection between Free Mafonry and Jacobinism—but we seek the link—Illuminatism.—

The office-bearers of one of the Lodges of Philalethes in Paris were Martin, Willermooz, (who had been deputy from the Chevaliers Beinfaifants to the Willemibad Convention) Chappe, Minet*, de la Henriere, and Savatier de l'Ange. In another (the Contrast Social) the Political Committee confifted of La Fayette, Condorcet, Pethion, d'Orleans, Abbe Bartholis, d'Aiguillon, Bailly, Marq. de la Salle, Defprefmenil. This particular Lodge had been founded and couducted by one De Leutre, an adventurer and cheat of the first magnitude, who fometimes made a figure, and at other times was without a fhilling. At this very time he was a fpy attached to the office of the police of Parist. The Duke of Orleans was Warden

* Minet was, I think, at this time a player. He was fon of a furgeon at Nantes—robbed his father and fied—enlifted in Holland—deferted and became fmuggler—was taken and burnt in the hand—became player and married an actrefs—then became prieft—and was made Bifhop of Nantes by Couftard in difcharge of a debt of 500l. Mr. Latocnaye often faw Couftard kncel to him for benediction. It cannot be fuppofed that he was much venerated in his pontificals in his native city.—It feems Minet, Minet, is the call of the children to a kitten—This was prohibited at Nantes, and many perfons whipped for the freedom ufed with his name.

of the Lodge. The Abbe Sieyes was a Brother Orator, but not of this Lodge, nor, I think, of the former. It was probably of the one conduct: ed by Mirabeau and the Abbe Perigord. But it appearsfrom the piece from which I am at prefent borrowing, that Sieyes was prefent in the meetings of both Lodges, probably as visiting Brother, employed in bringing them to common measures. I must observe, that the subsequent conduct of some of these men does not just accord with my conjecture, that the principles of the Illuminati were adopted in their full extent. But we know that all the Bavarian Brethren were not equally Illuminated, and it would be only copying their teachers if the cleverest of these their scholars should hold a fanctum fanctorum among themfelves, without inviting all to the conference. Obferve too that the chief leffon which they were now taking from the Germans was the method of doing business, of managing their correspondence, and of procuring and training pupils. A Frenchman does not think that he needs inftruction in any thing like principle or fcience. He is ready on all occasions to be the instructor.

Thus were the Lodges of France converted in a very fhort time into a fet of fecret affiliated focietics, corresponding with the mother Lodges of Paris, receiving from thence their principles and instructions, and ready to rife up at once when called upon to carry on the great work of overturning the ftate.

Hence it has arisen that the French aimed, in the very beginning, at overturning the wholeworld. In all the revolutions of other countries, the schemes and plots have extended no farther than the nation where they took their rife. But here we have feen that they take in the whole world world. They have repeatedly declared this in their manifestos, and they have declared it by their conduct—This is the very aim of the Illuminati. Hence too may be explained how the revolution took place in a moment in every part of France. The revolutionary focieties were early formed, and were working in fecret before the opening of the National Affembly, and the whole nation changed, and changed again, and again, as if by beat of drum. Those duly initiated in this mystery of iniquity were ready every where at a . call. And we see Weishaupt's wish accomplished in an unexpected degree, and the debates in a club giving laws to folemn affemblies of the nation, and all France bending the neck to the city of Paris. The members of the club are Illuminati, and fo are a great part of their correspondents.-Each operates in the ftate as a Minerval would do in the Order, and the whole goes on with fystematic regularity. The famous Jacobin Club was just one of those Lodges, as has been already obferved; and as, among individuals one commonly takes the lead, and contrives for the reft, fo it has happened on the prefent occasion, that this Lodge, supported by Orleans and Mirabeau, was the one that stepped forth and shewed itself to the world and thus became the oracle of the party; and all the reft only echoed its difcourfes, and at laft allowed it to give law to the whole, and even to rule the kingdom. It is to be remarked too that the founders of the club at Mentz were Illuminati, (Relig. Begebenh. 1793. p. 448.) before the Revolution, and correfponded with another Lodge at Strafburg; and thefe two produced mighty effects during the year 1790. In a performance called Memoires Posthumes de Custine it is faid, that when that general was bending his courfe to Holland.

land, the Illuminati at Strafburg, Worms, and Spire, immediately formed clubs, and invited him into that quarter, and, by going to Mentz and encouraging their brethren in that city, they raifed a party against the garrifon, and actually delivered up the place to the French army.

A little book, just now printed with the title Paragraphan, fays, that Zimmerman, of whom I have spoken more than once, went to France to preach liberty. He was employed as a missionary of Revolution in Alface, where he had formerly been a most fuccessful missionary of Illuminatism. Of his former proceedings the following is a curieus anecdote. He connected himfelf with a highly accomplished and beautiful woman, whose con'verfation had fuch charms, that he fays fhe gained him near a hundred converts in Spire alone. Some perfons of high rank, and great exterior dignity of character, had felt more tender impressionsand when the lady informed them of certain confequences to their reputation, they were glad to compound matters with her friend Mr. Zimmerman, who either paffed for her husband or took the fcandal on himfelf. He made above 1500 Louis d'ors in this way. When he returned, as a preacher of Revolution, he used to mount the pulpit with a fabre in his hand, and bawl out, " Behold, Frenchmen, this is your God. This " alone can fave you." The author adds, that when Cuffine broke into Germany, Zimmerman got admission to him, and engaged to deliver Manheim into his hands. To gain this purpofe, he offered to fet fome corners of the city on fire, and affured him of support. Cuftine declined the offer .--- Zimmerman appeared against him before the Revolutionary Tribunal, and accused him of treachery to his caufe .- Cuftine's answer is reremarkable.

markable. "Hardly," faid he, "had I fet my "foot in Germany, when this man, and all the " fools of his country, belieged me, and would " have delivered up to me their towns and vil-" lages-What occasion had I to do any thing to " Manheim, when the Prince was neutral?" Zimmerman found his full account in Robefpierre's bloody fway-but the fhort term of his attrocities was also the whole of Zimmerman's carreer. He was arrefted, but again liberated, and foon after again imprisoned, after which I can learn no more of him. The fame thing is politively afferted in another performance, called Cri de la Raifon, and in a third, called Les Majques Arrachees. Obferve too, that it is not the clubs merely that are accufed of this treachery, but the Illuminati. De la Metherie also, in his preface to the Journal de Physique for 1790, fays expressly, that " the cause " and arms of France were powerfully supported " in Germany by a fect of philosophers called the "Illuminated." In the preface to the Journal for 1792, he fays, that " Letters and deputations were " received by the Affembly from feveral Corref-" ponding Societies in England, felicitating them " on the triumph of Reafon and Humanity, and " promifing them their cordial affiftance."____ He read some of these manifestos, and fays, that "one of them recommended ftrongly the " political education of the children, who fhould " be taken from the parents and trained up " for the state."---Another lamented the baleful influence of property, faying, that " the ef-" forts of the Affembly would be fruitlefs, till the " fence was removed with which the laws for " anxioufly fecured inordinate wealth. They " fhould rather be directed to the fupport of ta-" lents and virtue; becaufe property would al-" ways

" ways fupport itfelf by the too great influence " which it had in every corrupted state. The " laws fhould prevent the too great accumulation " of it in Particular families."——In fhort, the counfel was almost verbatim what the Abbe Coffandey declared to have been preached in the meetings of the Illuminati, which terrified him and his colleagues, and made them quit the affociation. Anarcharsis Cloots, born in Prussian Westphalia, a keen Illuminatus, came to Paris for the express purpose of forwarding the great work, and by intriguing in the style of the Order, he got himself made one of the Representatives of the Nation. He feems to have been one of the completeft fanatics in Cosmo-politism, and just such a tool as Weithaupt would choose to employ for a coarfe and arduous job. He broke out at once into all the filly extravagance of the unthinking herd, and his whole language is just the jargon of Illumination. Citizen of the world-Liberty and Equality, the imprefcripitible Rights of Man-----Morality, dear Morality-Kings and Priefts are useless things-they are Despots and Corrupters, &c .- He declared himfelf an athcift, and zealoufly laboured to have atheifm eftablished by law, He conducted that farcical procession in the true ftyle of the most childish ritual of Philo, where counterfeited deputies from all quarters of the world, in the dreffes of their countries, came to congratulate the nation for its victory over Kings and Priests. It is also worthy of remark, that by this time Lcuchtfenring, whom we have feen fo zealous an Illuminatus, after having been as zealous a Protestant, tutor of Princes, Hofrath and Hofmeister, was now a secretary or clerk in one of the Burcaus of the National Affembly of France.

CHAP. IV. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

I may add as a finishing touch, that the National Affembly of France was the only body of men that I have ever heard of who openly and fyftematically proposed to employ affaffination, and to institute a band of patriots, who should exercise this profession either by fword, piftol, or poifon ;---and though the propofal was not carried into execution, it might be confidered as the fentiments of the meeting; for it was only delayed till it fhould be confidered how far it might not be imprudent, becaufe they might expect reprifals. The Abbe Dubois engaged to poifon. the Comte d'Artois; but was himfelf robbed and poifoned by his accomplices .- There were ftrong reasons for thinking that the Emperor of Germany was poifoned-and that Mirabeau was thus treated. by his pupil Orleans,-alfo Madame de Favras and her fon.-This was copying the Illuminati very carefully.

- After all these particulars, can any perfon have a doubt that the Order of Illuminati formally interfered in the French Revolution, and contributed greatly to its progrefs? There is no denying the infolence and oppression of the Crown and the Nobles, nor the mifery and flavery of the people, nor that there were fufficient provocation and caufe for a total change of meafures and of principles. But the rapidity with which one opinion was declared in every corner, and that opinion as quickly changed, and the change announced every where, and the perfect conformity of the principles, and famenefs of the language, even in arbitrary trifles, can hardly be explained in any other way. It may indeed be faid " que les beanx genies se rencontrent,-that " wits jump. The principles are the fame, and " the conduct of the French has been fuch as the " Illuminati would have exhibited; but this is all  --- the Illuminati no longer exifted." Enough has 2 P been been faid on this point already.—The facts are as have been narrated. The Illuminati continued as an Order, and even held affemblies, though not fo frequently nor fo formally as before, and though their Areopagus was no longer at Munich. But let us hear what the French them felves thought of the matter.

In 1789, or the beginning of 1790, a manifeste was sent from the GRAND NATIONAL LODGE of Free Masons (to it is entitled) at Paris, signed by the Duke of Orleans as Grand Master, addressed by the Duke of Orleans as Grand Master, addressed and sent to the Lodges in all the respectable cities of Europe, exhorting them to unite for the support of the French Revolution, to gain it friends, defenders, and dependents; and according to their opportunities, and the practicability of the thing, to kindle and propagate the spirit of revolution through all lands. This is a most important article, and deferves a very serious attention. I got it first of all in a work called, Hochste wichtige Erinnerungen zur rechten Zeit uber einige der allerernstbastesten Angelegenheiten dieses Zeitalters, von L. A. Hosfimann, Vienna, 1795^{*}. The author of this work fays, "That every thing

" he advances in these memorandums is confistent " with his own perfonal knowledge, and that he is ¢¢. ready to give convincing proofs of them to any 22 respectable perfon who will apply to him perfon-" ally. He has already given fuch convincing do-.. cuments to the Emperor, and to feveral Princes, .. that many of the machinations occasioned by this .. manifesto, have been detected and stopped; and " he would have no fcruple at laying the whole be-" fore the public, did it not unavoidably involve " feveral worthy perfons who had fuffered them-" felves to be mifled, and heartily repented of their

" errors."

CHAP. IV. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

"errors." He is naturally (being a Catholic) very fevere on the Proteftants, (and indeed he has much reafon,) and by this has drawn on himfelf many bitter retorts. He has however defended himfelf against all that are of any confequence to his good name and veracity, in a manner that fully convinces any impartial reader, and turns to the confusion of the flanderers.

Hoffmann fays, that "he faw fome of those mani-" feftos; that they were not all of one tenor, fome " being addreffed to friends, of whofe fupport they were already affured." One very important article of their contents is Earnest exhortations to eflablish in every quarter Secret Schools of political education, and schools for the public education of the children of the people, under the direction of well-principled mafters; and offers of pecuniary affifiance for this purpose, and for the encouragement of writers in favour of the Revolution, and for indemnifying the patriotic bookfellers who suffer by their endeavours to suppress publications which have an opposite tendency. We know very well that the immense revenue of the Duke of Orleans was fcattered among all the rabble of the Palais Royal. Can we doubt of its being employed in this manner? Our doubts must vanish, when we fee that not long after this was publicly faid in the National Affembly, " that this method was the most effectual for accomplishing their purpose of fetting Europe in a flame." "But much expence," fays the fpeaker, " will attend it, and much has al-" ready been employed, which cannot be named " because it is given in secret." The Assembly' had given the Illumination war-hoop-" Peace with " cottages, but war with palaces"-A pouvoir revolutionnaire is mentioned, which fuperfedes all narrow thoughts, all ties of morality. Lequinio publishes the most detestable book that ever issued from a printing printing prefs, Les Prejuges vaincus, containing all the principles, and expressed in the very words 'of Illuminatifm.

Hoffmann fays, that the French Propaganda had many emissaries in Vienna, and many friends whom he could point out. Mirabeau in particular had many connections in Vienna, and to the certain knowledge of Hoffmann, carried on a great correspondence in cyphers. The progress of Illumination had been very great in the Auftrian States, and a statesman gave him an account of their proceedings, (qui font redreffer les cheveux) which makes one's hair ftand on end. " I no lon-" ger wonder," fays he, " that the Neueste Arbei-" tung des Spartacus und Philo was forbidden. " O ye almighty Illuminati, what can you not " accomplish by your serpent-like infinuation and " cunning !" Your leaders fay, " This book is " dangerous, becaufe it will teach wicked men " the most refined methods of rebellion, and it " must never get into the hands of the common " people. They have faid with the most impu-" dent face to fome Princes, who did not per-" ceive the deeper laid reafon for suppressing the " book. The leaders of the Illuminati are, not " without reason, in anxiety, lest the inferior " classes of their own Society should make just " reprifals for having been to bafely tricked, by " keeping them back and in profound ignorance " of their real defigns; and for working on " them by the very goodnels of their hearts, to " their final ruin; and left the Free Mafons, " whom they have also abused, should think of " revenging themfelves, when the matchlefs vil-" lainy of their deceivers has been to clearly ex-" poled. It is in vain for them to talk of the danger " of inftructing the people in the methods of fo-" menting

CHAP. IV. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

66 menting rebellion by this book. The aims are 66 too apparent, and even in the neighbourhood of Regensburg, where the strength of the Illumi-64 nati lay, every perfon faid aloud, that the Illu-66 minatifm difcovered by this book was High 66 " Treason, and the most unheard of attempt to annihilate every religion and every civil go-66 vernment." He goes on: " In 1790 I was as 66 66 well acquainted with the fpirit of the Illumina-66 tion-fystem as at present, but only not fo docu-66 mented by their constitutional acts, as it is now 64 by the Neueste Arbeitung des Spartacus und 66 Philo. My Mafonic connections were formerly extensive, and my publication entitled Eighteen 66 66 Paragraphs Concerning Free Malonry, procured " me more acquaintance with Free Masons of 66 the greatest worth, and of Illuminati equally 66 upright, perfons of refpectability and knowledge, who had difcovered and repented the " trick and inveigling conduct of the Order. All 66 " of us jointly fwore opposition to the Illuminati, and my friends confidered me as a proper in-" 66 ftrument for this purpose. To whet my zeal, they put papers into my hands which made me 66 66 shudder, and raifed my diflike to the highest 66 pitch. I received from them lifts of the mem-" bers, and among them faw names which I la-66 mented exceedingly. 'Thus flood matters in 66 1790, when the French Revolution began to take a ferious turn. The intelligent faw in the open fystem of the Jacobins the complete hid-66 66 66 den system of the Illuminati. We knew that 64 this fystem included the whole world in its 66 aims, and France was only the place of its first 66 explosion. The Propaganda works in every corner to this hour, and its emiffaries run about 66 " in all the four quarters of the world, and are to 66 be

" be found in numbers in every city that is a feat of government."

"He farther relates how they in Vienna wanted to enlift him, and, as this failed, how they have abused him even in the foreign newfpapers.

"I have perfonal knowledge (continues he) "that in Germany a fecond Mirabeau, Mauvil-" lon, had proposed in detail a plan of revolution, " entirely and precifely fuited to the prefent state " of Germany. This he circulated among feve-" ral Free Maion Lodges, among all the Illumi-" nated Lodges which still remained in Germany, " and through the hands of all the emiffaries of " the Propaganda, who had been already dif-" patched to the frontiers (vorposten) of every " district of the empire, with means for stirring " up the people." (N. B. In 1792, Mauvillon, finding abundant fupport and encouragement in the appearance of things round him, when the French arms had penetrated every where, and their invitations to revolt had met with fo hearty a reception from the difcontented in every flate, came boldly forward, and, in the Brunswick Journal for March 1792, declared that "he heartily " rejoiced in the French Revolution, wished it all " fuccefs, and thought himfelf liable to no re-" proach when he declared his hopes that a fimi-" lar Revolution would fpeedily take place in " Germany.")

In the Hamburgh Political Journal, August, September, and October 1790, there are many proofs of the machinations of emissaries from the Mafon Lodges of Paris among the German Free Masons—See pages 836, 963, 1087, &c. It appears that a club has taken the name of Propagandaand meets once a week at least, in the form of a Mason

CHAP. IV. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

Mason Lodge. It confists of persons of all nations. and is under the direction of the Grand Master, the Duke of Orleans. De Leutre is one of the Wardens. They have divided Europe into colonies, to which they give revolutionary names, fuch as the Cap, the Pike, the Lantern, &c. They have ministers in these colonies. (One is pointed out in Saxony, by marks which I presume are well understood.) A secret press was found in Saxe Gotha, furnished with German types, which printed a seditious work called the Journal of Humanity. This Journal was found in the mornings lying in the fireets and highways. The house belonged to an Illuminatus of the name of Duport, a poor schoolmaster-he was associated with another in Strafburg, who was alfo an Illuminatus .--His name was Meyer, the writer of the Strafburg Newspaper. He had been some time a teacher in Salzmann's accademy, who we fee was alfo an Illuminatus, but difpleafed with their proceedings almost at first. (Private Correspondence.)

"I have perfonal knowledge (continues Profeffor Hoffman) that in 1791, during the temporary dearth at Vienna, feveral of thefe emiffaries were bufy in corrupting the minds of the poor, by telling them that in like manner the court had produced a famine in Paris in 1789. I detected fome of them, and exposed them in my Patriotic Remarks on the Prefent Dearth, and had the fatisfaction of feeing my endeavours of confiderable effect."

Surely these facts show that the Anarchists of France knew of the German Illuminati, and confided in their support. They also knew to what particular Lodges they could address themselves with fastety and confidence.—But what sheed is there of more argument, when we know the zeal of the Illuminati, and the unhoped for opportunity that the Revolution had given them of acting with immediate effect in carrying on their great and darling work? Can we doubt that they would eagerly put their hand to the Plough? And, to complete the proof, do we not know from the lifts found in the fecret correspondence of the Order, that they already had Lodges in France, and that in 1790 and 1791 many. Illuminated Lodges in Germany, viz. Mentz, Worms, Spire, Frankfort, actually interfered, and produced great effects. In Switzerland too they were no lefs active. They had Lodges at Geneva and at Bern. At Bern two Jacobins were fentenced to feveral years imprisonment, and among their papers were found their patents of Illumination. I alio fee the fate of Geneva afcribed to the operations of Illuminati refiding there, by feveral writers-particularly by Girtanner, and by the Gottingen editor of the Revolution Almanac.

I conclude this article with an extract or two from the proceedings of the National Affembly and Convention, which make it evident that their principles and their practice are precifely those of the Illuminati, on a great fcale.

When the affumption of the Duchy of Savoy as an 84th Department was debated, Danton faid to the Convention.

" In the moment that we fend freedom to a nation on our frontier, we must fay to them you must have no more Kings—for if we are furrounded by tyrants, their coalition puts our own freedom in danger.—When the French nation fent us hither, it created a great committee for the general infurrection of the people."

CHAP. IV. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

On the 19th of November 1792 it was decreed, "That the Convention, in the name of "the French nation, tenders help and fraternity "to all people who would recover their liberty."

On the 21st of November, the Prefident of the Convention faid to the pretended deputies of the Duchy of Savoy, "Reprefentatives of an inde-" pendent people, important to mankind was the " day when the National Convention of France " pronounced its fentence, Royal dignity is abo-" lifted.—.From that day many nations will, in " future, reckon the era of their political exist-" ence.—From the beginning of civil establish-" ments Kings have been in opposition to their " nations—but now they rife up to annihilate " Kings.—Reason, when the darts her rays into " every corner, lays open eternal truths—.She " alone enables us to pass fentence on defpots, hi-" therto the fcare-crow of other nations."

But the most diffinct exhibition of principle is to be feen in a report from the diplomatic committee, who were commissioned to deliberate on the conduct which France was to hold with other nations. On this report was founded the decree of the 15th of December 1793. The Reporter addreffes the Convention as follows:

"The Committees of Finance and War afk in the beginning—What is the object of the war which we have taken in hand? Without all doubt the object is THE ANNIHILATION OF ALL PRIVILEGES, WAR WITH THE PALACES, PEACE WITH THE COTTAGES. These are the principles on which your declaration of war is founded. All tyranny, all privilege, must be treated as an enemy in the countries where we fet our foot. This is the genuine refult of our principles.—But it is not with Kings alone that 2 Q "we

we are to wage war—were thele our fole enemies, we fhould only have to bring down ten or twelve heads. We have to fight with all their accomplices, with the privileged orders, who devour and have opprefied the people during many centuries.

"We must therefore declare ourselves for a " revolutionary power in all the countries into which we enter-(Loud applauses from the Af-fembly)-Nor need we put on the cloak of hu-66 66 66 manity-we difdain fuch little arts.-We must clothe ourfelves with all the brilliancy of rea-66 " fon, and all the force of the nation. We need 66 them already. The first thing we must do is to 66 ring the alarum bell, for infurrection and uproar.---We must, in a folemn manner, let the 66 66 people fee the banishment of their tyrants and privileged cafts---otherwife, the people, ac-66 cuftomed to their fetters, will not be able to 66 66 break their bonds .- It will effect nothing, mere-" ly to excite a rifing of the people-this would only be giving them words inftead of ftanding 66 " by them.

" And fince, in this manner, we ourfelves are the Revolutionary Administration, all that is 66 against the rights of the people must be over-66 thrown at our entry-We must difplay our prin-66 ciples by actually deftroying all tyranny; and 66 our generals after having chafed away the ty-66 rants and their fatellites, must proclaim to the 26 people that they have brought them happines; 66 and then, on the fpot, they must suppress tithes, 66 " feudal rights, and every species of servitude." " But we shall have done nothing if we stop

" here. Ariftocracy still domineers-we must therefore suppress all authorities existing in the therefore fuppress all authorities existing in the therefore fuppress all authorities existing in the

⁴⁴ hands of the upper claffes.—When the Revo⁴⁴ lutionary Authority appears, there muft nothing
⁴⁵ of the old eftablifhment remain.—A popular
⁴⁶ fyftem muft be introduced—every office muft ⁴⁷ be occupied by new functionaries—and the ⁴⁶ Sans Culiottes muft every where have a fhare
⁴⁶ in the Administration.

" Still nothing is done, till we declare aloud 66 the precision of our principles to such as want only half freedom .- We must fay to them-If " you think of compromising with the privileged 66 cafts, we cannot fuffer fuch dealing with ty-66 5.6 rants-They are our enemies, and we must treat " them as enemies, becaufe they are neither for " Liberty nor Equality .--- Show yourfelves difposed to receive a free constitution-and the 66 Convention will not only frand by you, but will 66 give you permanent support; we will defend 26 you against the vengeance of your tyrants-66 " against their attacks, and against their return. "--- Therefore abolish from among you the No-" bles, and every ecclefiaftical and military in-" corporation. They are incompatable with Equa-" lity .- Henceforward you are citizens, all equal " in rights-equally called upon to rule, to de-" fend, and to ferve your country .--- The agents " of the French Republic will instruct and assist " you in forming a free constitution, and affure 66 you of happiness and fraternity."

This Report was loudly applauded, and a decree formed in precife conformity to its principles. Both were ordered to be translated into all languages, and copies to be furnished to their generals, with orders to have them carefully difperfed in the countries which they invaded.

And, in completion of these decrees, their armies found it easy to collect as many discontented or worthlefs perfous in any country as fufficed for fetting up a tree of liberty. This they held as a fufficient call for their interference.----Sometimes they performed this ceremony themfelves—a reprefentation was eafily made up in the fame way —and then, under the name of a free conftitution, the nation was forced to acquiefce in a form dictated at the point of the bayonet, in which they had not the fmalleft liberty to choofe—and they were plundered of all they had, by way of compenfating to France for the trouble fhe had taken.—And this they call Liberty.—It needs no comment.—

Thus have I attempted to prove that the prefent awful fituation of Europe, and the general fermentation of the public mind in all nations, have not been altogether the natural operations of difcontent, oppression, and moral corruption, although these have been great, and have operated with fatal energy; but that this political fever has been carefully and fystematically heightened by bodies of men, who professed to be the physicians of the State, and, while their open practice employed cooling medicines, and a treatment which all approved, administered in fecret the most inflammatory poifons, which they made up fo as to flatter the difeafed fancy of the patient. Although this was not a plan begun, carried on, and completed by the fame perfons, it was undoubtedly an uniform and confiftent fcheme, proceeding on the fame unvaried principle, and France undoubtedly now fmarts under all the woes of German Illumination.

I beg leave to fuggest a few thoughts, which may enable us to draw some advantage from this shocking mass of information.

General

General Reflections.

I. I may obferve, in the first place, and I beg it may be particularly attended to, that in all those villainous machinations against the peace of the world,* the attack has been first made on the principles of Morality and Religion. The confpirators faw that till thefe are extirpated, they have no chance of fuc-cels; and their manner of proceeding fhews that they confider Religion and Morality as infeparably connected together. We learn much from this-Fas eft et ab hoste doceri.-They endeavour to destroy our religious fentiments, by first corrupting our morals. They try to inflame our passions, that when the demands from this quarter become urgent, the restraints of Religion may immediately come in fight, and ftand in the way. They are careful, on this occafion, to give fuch a view of those reftraints, that the real origin of them does not appear.-We are made to believe that they have been altogether the contrivance of Priefts and defpots, in order to get the command of us. They take care to support thefe affertions by facts, which, to our great thame, and greater misfortune, are but too numerous. Having now the paffions on their fide, they find no difficulty in perfuading the voluptuary, or the difcontented, that tyranny, actually exerted, or refolved on in future, is the fole origin of religious refiraint. He feeks no further argument, and gives himfelf no trouble to find any. Had he examined the matter with any care, he would find himfelf juft brought back to those very feelings of moral excellence and moral depravity that he willnes to get rid of altogether; and thefe would tell him that pure Religion does does not lay a fingle reftraint on us that a poble na= ture would not have laid on itfelf-nor enjoins à fingle duty which an ingenuous and warm heart would not be ashamed to find itself deficient in. He would then see that all the fanctions of Religion are fitted to his high rank in the fcale of existence. And the more he contemplates his future profpects, the more they brighten upon his view, the more attainable they appear, and the more he is able to know what they may probably be. Having attained this happy flate of mind, (an attainment in the power of any kind heart that is in earnest in the enquiry) he will think that no punishment is too great for the unthankful and groveling foul which can forego fuch hopes, and reject these noble proffers, for the comparatively frivolous and transitory gratifications of life. He is not frightened into worthy and virtuous conduct by fears of such merited punishment; but, if not enticed into it by his high expectations, he is, at least, retained in the paths of virtue by a kind of manly fhame.

But all this is overlooked, or is kept out of fight, in the inftructions of Illuminatifm. In these the eye must be kept always directed to the Despot. This is the bugbear, and every thing is made to connect with prefent or future tyranny and oppreffion----Therefore Religion is held out as a combination of terrors---the invention of the flate-tools, the priefls. But it is not eafy to fliffe the fuggeftions of Naturetherefore no pains are fpared to keep them down, by encreasing the uncertainty and doubts which arife in the course of all speculations on such subjects. Such difficulties occur in all fcientific discussions.---Here they must be numerous and embarraffing--for in this enquiry we come near the first principles of things, and the first principles of human knowledge. The geometer does not wonder at miftakes takes even in bis fcience, the most fimple of all others.---Nor does the mechanic or the chemist reject all his fcience, becaufe he cannot attain clear conceptions of fome of the natural relations which operate in the phenomena under his confide-ration.—Nor do any of these fludents of nature brand with the name of fool, or knave, or bigot, another perfon who has drawn a different conclufion from the phenomenon.----In one point they all agree-they find themfelves poffeffed of faculties which enable them to fpeculate, and to difcover; and they find, that the operation of those faculties is quite unlike the things which they contemplate by their means—and they feel a fatisfaction in the pof-feffion of them, and in this diffinction.—But this feems a misfortune to our Illuminators. I have long been ftruck with this. If by deep meditation I have folved a problem which has baffled the endeavours of others, I fhould hardly thank the perfon who convinced me that my fuccels was entirely ow-ing to the particular flate of my health, by which my brain was kept free from many irritations to which other perfons are exposed. Yet this is the conduct of the Illuminated—They are abundantly felf-conceited ; and yet they continually endeavour to de-ftroy all grounds of felf-effimation.---They rejoice in every difcovery that is reported to them of fome resemblance, unnoticed before, between mankind and the inferior creation, and would be happy to find that the refemblance is complete. It is very true, Mr. Pope's "Poor Indian, with untutor'd " mind," had no objection to his dog's going to heaven with him :

" And thinks, admitted to that equal fky,

" His faithful dog shall bear him company."

315

This is not an abject, but it is a modeft fentiment. But our high-minded philosophers, who, with Beatrice in the play, "cannot brook obedience to a " wayward piece of marl," if it be in the fhape of a Prince, have far other notions of the matter. Indeed they are not vet agreed about it. Mr. de la Metherie hopes, that before the enlightened Republic of France has got into its teens, he shall be able to tell his fellow-citizens, in his Journal de Phyfique, that particular form of cryftallization which men have been accustemed to call God .--- Dr. Priestley again deduces all intelligence from elaftic undulations, and will p-obably think, that his own great difcoveries have been the quiverings of some fiery marsh miasma. While Pope's poor Indian hopes to take his dog to heaven with him, thefe Illuminators hope to die like dogs, and that both foul and body shall be as if they never had been,

Is not this a melancholy refult of all our Illumination? It is of a piece with the termination of the ideal Philofophy, viz. profeffed and total ignorance. Should not this make us flart back and hefitate, before we pout like wayward children at the hardfhips of civil fubordination, and before we make a facrifice to our ill humour of all that we value ourfelves for ? Does it not carry ridicule and abfurdity in its forehead ?---Such affertions of perfonal worth and dignity, (always excepting Princes and Priefls,) and fuch abject acknowledgments of worthleffr.efs.---Does not this, of itfelf, fhow that there is fome radical fault in the whole? It has all arifen from what they have called Illumination, and this turns out to be worfe than darknefs---But we also know that it has all arifen from felf-conceited difcontent, and that it has been brought to its prefent flate by the rage of fpeculation. We may venture to put the queflion to any man's confcience --- whether difcontent tent did not precede his doubts about his own nature and whether he has not encouraged the train of argument that tended to degrade him? "Thy wifh "was father, Harry, to that thought."---Should not this make us diffruft, at leaft, the operations of this faculty of our mind, and try to moderate and check this darling propenfity.---It feems a misfortune of the age---for we fee that it is a natural fource of difturbance and revolution.

But here it will be immediately faid, "What, " must we give over thinking---be no longer ration-" al creatures, and believe every lie that is told us?" By no means .--- Let us be really rational creatures--and, taught by experience, let us, in all our fpeculations on fubjects which engage the paffions, guard ourfelves with the most anxious care against the risk of having our judgments warped by our defires .---There is no propenfity of our nature of which the proper and modeft indulgence is not beneficial to man, and which is not hurtful, when this indulgence is carried too far.-And if we candidly perufe the page of hiftory, we fhall be convinced that the abufe is great in proportion as the fubject is important. What has been fo ruinoufly perverted as the religious principle ?--- What horrid fuperstition has it not produced? The Reader will not, I hope, take it amifs that I prefume to direct his attention to fome maxims which ought to conduct a prudent man in his indulgence of a fpeculative difposition, and apply them to the cafe in hand.

Whoever will for a while call off his attention from the common affairs of life, the Curæ hominum, et rerum pondus inane, and will but reflect a little on that wonderful principle within him, which carries him over the whole univerfe, and fhows him its various relations---Whoever alfo remarks how very fmall a proportion his own individual existence bears to this immeasurable scene, cannot but seel an inexpreffible pleasure in the contemplation of his own powers---He must rife in his own estimation, and be disposed to cherish with fondness this principle which fo eminently raifes him above all around him. Of all the fources of human vanity this is furely the moft manly, the moft excufable, and the moft likely to be extravagantly indulged .- We may be certain that it will be fo indulged, and that men will frequently fpeculate for the fake of fpeculation alone, and that they will have too much confidence in the refults of this favourite occupation .--- As there have been ages of indolent and abject credulity and fuperflition, it is next to certain that there are also times of wild and extravagant fpeculation --- and when we fee it becoming a fort of general paffion, we may be certain that this is a cafe in point.

This can hardly be denied to be the character of the prefent day. It is not denied. On the contrary it is gloried in as the preiogative of the eighteenth century. All the fpeculations of antiquity are confidered as glimmerings (with the exceptions of a few brighter flashes) when compared with our prefent meridian splendor. We should therefore listen with caution to the inferences from this boafted Illumination. Also when we reflect on what passes in our own minds, and on what we observe in the world, of the mighty influence of our defires and paffions on our judgments, we should carefully notice whether any fuch warping of the belief is probable in the prefent cafe. That it is fo is almost certain---for the general and immediate effect of this Illumination is to leffen or remove many reftraints which the fanctions of religion lay on the indulgence of very ftrong paffions, and to diminish our regard for a certain purity or correctness of manners, which religion recommends as the only conduct duct fuited to our noble natures, and as absolutely neceffary for attaining that perfection and happinefs of which we are capable .--- For furely if we take away religion, it will be wifdom " to eat and " to drink, fince to-morrow we die." If, moreover, we fee this Illumination extolled above all fcience, as friendly to virtue, as improving the heart, and as producing a just morality, which will lead to happiness both for ourselves and others, but perceive at the fame time that these affertions are made at the expence of principles, which our natural feelings force us to venerate as fupreme and paramount to all others, we may then be certain that our informer is trying to miflead and deceive us.---For all virtue and goodness both of heart and conduct, is in perfect harmony, and there is no jarring or inconfistency. But we must pass this fentence on the doctrines of this Illumination. For it is a melancholy truth that they have been preached and recommended, for the most part, by clergymen, parish-ministers, who, in the prefence of invoked Deity, and in the face of the world, have fet their folemn feal to a fyftem of doctrines directly opposite to those recommended in their writings; which doctrines they folemnly profess to believe, and folemnly fwear to inculcate. Surely the informations and instructions of fuch men should be rejected. Where shall we find their real opinious? In their folemn oaths? -or in these infidel differtations?-In either case, they are deceivers, whether milled by vanity or by the mean defire of church-emoluments; or they are profitutes, courting the fociety of the wealthy and fenfual. Honefty, like justice, admits of no degrees. A man is honeft, or he is a knave, and who would truft a knave? But fuch men are unfuitable inftructors for another reason—they are unwife:

unwife; for, whatever they may think, they are not refpected as men of worth, but are inwardly defpifed as parafites, by the rich, who admit them into their company, and treat them with civility, for their own reafons. We take inftructions not mercly from the knowing, the learned, but from the wife—not therefore from men who give fuch evidences of weaknefs.

Such would be the conduct of a prudent man, who liftens to the inftructions of another with the ferious intention of profiting by them. In the prefent case he sees plain proofs of degraded felf eftimation, of difhonesty, and of mean motives. But the prudent man will go further-he will remark that diffolute manners, and actions which are inevitably fubverfive of the peace and order, nay, of the very existence of society, are the natural and neceffary confequences of irreligion. Should any doubt of this remain in his mind; should he fometimes think of an Epictetus, or one or two individuals of antiquity, who were eminently virtuous, without the influence of religious fanctions, he should recollect, that the Stoics were animated by the thought, that while the wife man was playing the game of life, the gods were looking on, and pleafed with his skill. Let him read the beautiful account given by Dr. Smith of the rife of the Stoic philosophy, and he will fee that it was an artificial but noble attempt of a few exalted minds, enthusiasts in virtue, aiming to steel their souls against the dreadful but unavoidable misfortunes to which they were continually exposed by the daily recurring revolutions in the turbulent democracies of ancient Greece. There, a philosopher was this day a magistrate, and the next day a captive and a flave. He would fee that this fair picture of mental happiness and independence was fitted fitted for the contemplation of only a few choice spirits, but had no influence on the bulk of mankind. He must admire the noble characters who were animated by this manly enthusiafm, and who have really exhibited fome wonderful pictures of virtuous heroifm ; but he will regret, that the influence of these manly, these natural principles, was not more extensive. He will fayto himfelf, " How will a whole nation act when re-" ligious fanctions are removed, and men are ac-" tuated by reafon alone?"-He is not without instruction on this important subject. France has given an awful leffon to furrounding nations, by fliewing them what is the natural effect of flaking off the religious principle, and the veneration for that pure morality which characterifes Chrifstianity. By a decree of the Convention, (June 6, 1794) it is declared, that there is nothing criminal in the promiscuous commerce of the fexes, and therefore nothing that derogates from the female character, when woman forgets that she is the depositary of all domestic fatisfaction cial life .---- that on her modesty and delicacy depend all the refpect and confidence that will make a man attach himfelf to her fociety, free her from labour, fhare with her the fruits of all his own exertions, and work with willingnefs and delight, that fhe may appear on all occasions his equal, and the ornament of all his acquifitions. In the very argument which this felected body of fenators has given for the propriety of this decree, it has degraded woman below all estimation. "It is to prevent her " from murdering the fruit of unlawful love, by re-" moving her fhame, and by relieving her from the "fear of want." The fenators fay, " the Republic " wants citizens, and therefore must not only re-" move

" move this temptation of fhame, but must take care " of the mother while the nurfes the child. It is " the property of the nation, and muft not be loft." The woman all the while is confidered only as the the-animal, the breeder of Sans Culottes. This is the just morality of Illumination. It is really amufing (for things revolting to nature now amule) to obferve with what fidelity the principles of the Illuminati have expressed the featiments which take poffellion of a people who have thaken off the fanctions of Religion and morality. The following is part of the address to Psycharion and the company mentioned in page 257 : " Once more, Pfycharion, I in-" dulge you with a look behind you to the flowery " days of childhood. Now look forwards, young " woman ! the holy circle of the marriageable, " (mannbaren) welcome you. Young men, honour " the young woman, the future breeder (gebaere-" rin) !" Then, to all.-" Rejoice in the dawn of " Illumination and of Freedom. Nature at last en-" joys her facred never-fading rights. Long was " her voice kept down by civil fubordination; but " the days of your majority now draw nigh, and you " will no longer, under the authority of guardians, " account it a reproach to confider with enlighten-· " ed eves the fecret workshops of nature, and to en-" joy your work and duty." Minos thought this very fine, but it raifed a terrible disturbance and broke up the affembly.

Such are the effects of this boafted enlightening of the human mind with refpect to religion and morality. Let us next confider what is the refult of the mighty informations which we have got in refpect of our focial or political connections.

II. We have learned the fum total of this political Illumination, and fee that, if true, it is melancholy, deftructive of our prefeut comforts, numerous as they they are, and affords no prospect of redress from which we can profit, but, on the contrary, plunges mankind into diffention, mutual injury, and univerfal mifery, and all this for the chance only of prevailing in the contefl, and giving our pollerity a chance of going on in peace, if no change shall be produced, as in former times, by the efforts of ambitious men. But the Illumination appears to be partial, nay falfe. What is it ? . It holds out to the prince nothing but the refignation of all his possessions, rights and claims, fanctioned by the quiet polletfion of ages, and by all the feelings of the human heart which give any notion of right to his lowest fubject. All these possesfions and claims are difcovered to have arifen from usurpations, and are therefore tyranny. It has been difcovered, that all fubordinate fubjections were enforced, therefore their continuance is flavery. But both of these historical affertions are in a great degree falfe, and the inferences from them are unreafonable. The world has gone on as we fee it go on at prefent. Most principalities or fovereignties have arilen as we fee perfonal authorities and influence arife every day among ourfelves. Bufinefs for the whole must be done. Most men are fufficiently occupied by their private affairs, and they are indolent even in thefe-they are contented when another does the thing for them. There is not a little village, nor a fociety of men, where this is not feen every day. Some men have an enjoyment in this kind of vicarious employment. Other men like influence and power, and thus are compenfated for their trouble. Thus many petty managers of public affairs arife in every country. The mutual animofities of individuals, and still more, the animofities of tribes, clans, and different affociations, give rife to another kind of fuperiorsto leaders, who direct the ftruggles of the reft, whether whether for offence or defence. The defcendants of Ifrael faid, "they wanted a man to go out before "the people, like other nations." As the fmall bufinefs of a few individuals requires a manager or a leader, fo do fome more general affairs of thefe petty fuperiors.---Many of thefe alfo are indolent enough to wifh this trouble taken off their hands; and thus another rank of fuperiors arifes, and a third, and fo on, 'till a great State may be formed; and in this gradation each clafs is a competent judge of the conduct of that clafs only which is immediately above it.

All this may arife, and has often arifen, from voluntary conceffion alone. This conceffion may proceed from various caufes, —from confidence in fuperior talents—from confidence in great worth,--moft generally from the refpect or deference which all men feel for great poffeffions. This is frequently founded in felf-intereft and expectations of advantage; but it is natural to man, and perhaps fprings from our inftinctive fympathy with the fatisfactions of others---we are unwilling to difturb them, and even wifh to promote them.

But this fubordination may arife, and has often arifen, from other caules---from the love of power and influence, which makes fome men eager to lead others, or even to manage their concerns. We fee this every day, and it may be perfectly innocent. It often arifes from the defire of gain of one kind or another.---This alfo may frequently be indulged with perfect innocence, and even with general advantage. Frequently, however, this fubordination is produced by the love of power or of gain pufhed to an immoderate degree of ambition, and rendered unjuft. Now there arife opprefilon, tyranny, fufferings, and flavery. Now appears an oppofition between the rights or claims of the ruler and of the people.

people. Now the rulers come to confider themielves as a different clafs, and their transfactions are now only with each other.---Prince becomes the rival or the enemy of Prince; and in their contests one prevails, and the dominion is enlarged. This rivals fhip may have begun in any rank of superiors; even between the first managers of the affairs of the smallest communities; and it must be remarked that they only are the immediate gainers or losers in the contest; while those below them live at ease, enjoying many advantages of the delegation of their own concerns.

No human fociety has ever proceeded purely in either of thefe two ways, but there has always been a mixture of both .--- But this process is indifpensably neceffary for the formation of a great nation, and for all the confequences that refult only from fuch a coalition.-Therefore it is necessary for giving rife to all those comforts, and luxuries, and elegances, which are to be found only in great and cultivated states. It is necessary for producing fuch enjoyments as we fee around us in Europe, which we prize fo highly, and for which we are making all this flir and diffurbance. I believe that no man who expects to be believed will positively affert that human nature and human enjoyments are not meliorated by this cultivation.-It feems to be the intention of nature, and, notwithflanding the follies and vices of many, we can have little hefitation in faying that there are in the most cultivated nations of Europe, and even in the higheft ranks of those nations, men of great virtue and worth, and of high accomplishment-Nor can we deny that fuch men are the finest specimens of human nature. Rosteau indeed wrote a whimfical pamphlet, in which he had the vanity to think that he had proved that all thefe fruits of cultivation were loss to humanity and virtue-Yet Rouffeau could not be contented with the 25 fociety fociety of the rude and unpolifhed, although he pretended that he was almost the fole worfhipper of pure virtue.—He supported himself, not by affisting the simple peafant, but by writing music and luscious novels for the pampered rich.

. This is the circumftance entirely overlooked, or artfully kept out of fight, in the boafted Illumination of these days. No attention is paid to the important changes which have happened in national greatnefs, in national connection, in national improvement-yet we never think of parting with any of the advantages, real or imaginary, which thefe changes have produced-nor do we reflect that in order to keep a great nation together-to make it act with equality, or with preponderancy, among other nations, the individual exertions must be concentrated, must be directed-and that this requires a ruler vefted with fupreme power, and interested by some great and endearing motive, fuch as hereditary possession of this power and influence, to maintain and defend this coalition of men .- All this is overlooked, and we attend only to the fubordination which is indifpenfably neceffary. Its grievances are immediately felt, and they are heightened tenfold by a delicacy or fensibility which springs from the great improvements in the accommodations and enjoyments of life, which the gradual ufurpation-and fubfequent fubordination have produced, and continue to fupport. But we are determined to have the elegance and grandeur of a palace without the prince.-We will not give up any of our luxuries and refinements, yet will not fupport those high ranks and those nice minds which produced them, and which must continue to keep them from degenerating into barbarous fimplicity and coarfe fenfuality. We would keep the philosophers, the poets, the artifls, but not the Mæconafes. It is very true that in fuch a flate there would be no Conjuration des Philosophes :

Philofophes; for in fuch a flate this vermin of philofophes and scribblers would not have existed. In fhort, we would have what is impossible.

I have no hefitation in faying, that the British Conflitution is the form of government for a great and refined nation, in which the ruling fentiments and propentities of human nature feem most happily blended and balanced. There is no occasion to vannt it as the ancient rights of Britons, the wifdom of ages, &c. It has attained its prefent pitch of perfection by degrees, and this not by the efforts of wildom, but by the firuggles of vice and folly, working on a rich fund of good nature, and of manly spirit, that are conspicuous in the British character. I do not hesitate to fay that it is the only form of government which will admit and give full exercise to all the respectable propensities of our nature, with the least chance of disturbance and the greatest probability of man's arriving at the highest pitch of improvement in every thing that raifes him above the beafts of the field. Yet there is no part of it that may not, that is not, abused, by pushing it to an improper length, and the fame watchful care is neceffary for preferving our ineftimable bleffings that was employed in acquiring them. This is to be done, not by flying at once to au abstract theory of the rights of man. There is an evident folly in this procedure. What is this theory? It is the best general sketch that we can draw of social life, deduced from our knowledge of human nature. And what is this knowledge? It is a well digested abstract, or rather a declaration of what we have observed of human actions. What is the use therefore of this intermediate picture, this theory of the rights of man?-It has a chance of being unlike the original----it must certainly have imperfections, fections, therefore it can be of no use to us. We fhould go at once to the original-we fhould confider how men have alled-what have been their what of these are inconfistent with each otherwhat are the degrees of indulgence which have been admitted in them all without diffurbance.-I will venture to fay that whoever does this, will find himfelf imperceptibly led to contemplate a mixed hereditary monarchy, and will figure to himfelf a parliament of King, Lords, and Commons, all looking at each other with fomewhat of a cautious or jealous eye, while the reft of the nation are fitting, " each under his own vine and " under his own fig-tree, and there is none to " make him afraid ;" in one word, the Conftitution of Great Britain.

A most valuable result of such contemplation will be a thorough conviction that the grievance which is most clamorously infifted on is the inevitable confequence of the liberty and fecurity which we enjoy. I mean ministerial corruption, with all the difinal tale of placemen, and penfioners, and rotten boroughs, &c. &c. These are never seen in a defpotic government-----there they are not wanted-nor can they be very apparent in an uncultivated and poor state-but in a luxurious nation, where pleafures abound, where the returns of industry are secure; here an individual looks on every thing as his own acquisition-he does not feel his relation to the state-has no patriotifmthinks that he would be much happier if the state would let him alone. He is fretted by the reftraints which the public weal lays on him---therefore government and governors appear as checks and hindrances to his exertions---hence a general inclination to refift administration. Yet public bufinefs bufinels must be done, that we may lie down and rife again in fafety and peace. Administration must be supported---there are always persons who wish to poffefs the power that is exercised by the present ministers, and would turn them out. How is all this to be remedied? I fee no way but by applying to the felfish views of individuals --- by rewarding the friends of administration--- This may be done with perfect virtue---and from this the felfifh will conceive hopes, and will fupport a virtuous ministry-- but they are as ready to help a wicked one. This becomes the greatest misfortune of a free nation. Ministers are tempted to bribe---and, if a fystematic opposition be confidered as a neceffary part of a practical conftitution, it is almost indispensable --- and it is no where fo prevalent as in a pure democracy. Laws may be contrived to make it very troublefome, but can never extirpate it nor greatly diminish it ; this can be done only by defpotifm, or by national virtue. It is a shameful complaint----we should not reprobate a few ministers, but the thousands who take the bribes. Nothing tends fo much to diminish it in a corrupted nation as great limitations to the eligibility of reprefentatives --- and this is the beauty of our constitution.

We have not different, therefore, by this boafted Illumination, that Princes and fuperiors are ufelefs, and muft vanifh from the earth; nor that the people have now attained full age, and are fit to govern themfelves. We want only to revel a little on the laft fruits of national cultivation, which we would quickly confume, and never allow to be raifed again. No matter how this progrefs began, whether from conceffion or ufurpation---We poffefs it, and, if wife, we will preferve it, by preferving its indifpentable fupports. They have have indeed been frequently employed very improperly, but their most pernicious abuse has been this breed of feribbling vermin, which have made the body politic fmart in every limb.

Hear what opinion was entertained of the fages of France by their Prince, the father of Louis XVI. the unfortunate martyr of Monarchy. " By " the principles of our new Philosophers, the " Throne no longer wears the fplendour of divi-" nity. They maintain that it arose from vio-" lence, and that by the fame justice that force " erected it, force may again shake it, and over-" turn it. The people can never give up their " power. They only let it out for their own ad-" vantage, and always retain the right to refeind " the contract, and refume it whenever their per-" fonal advantage, their only rule of conduct, " requires it. Our philosophers teach in public " what our passions fuggest only in fecret. They " fay to the Prince that all is permitted only " when all is in his power, and that his duty is " fulfilled when he has pleafed his fancy. Then, " furely, if the laws of felf-interest, that is, the " felf-will of human passions, shall be fo generally . " admitted, that we thereupon forget the eternal " laws of God and of Nature, all conceptions of " right and wrong, of virtue and vice, of good " and evil, must be extirpated from the human " heart. The throne must totter, the fubjects " must become unmanageable and mutinous, and " their ruler hard-hearted and inhuman. The " people will be inceffantly oppreffed or in an " uproar." --- " What fervice will it be if I order " fuch a book to be burnt ?--- the author can write " another to-morrow." This opinion of a Prince is unpolified indeed, and homely, but it is juft.

Weithaupt

Weifhaupt grants, that "there will be a terri-" ble convulsion, and a storm --- but this will be " fucceeded by a calm --- the unequal will now be " equal--- and when the caufe of diffention is thus " removed, the world will be in peace." --- True. when the caufes of diffension are removed. Thus, the destruction of our crop by vermin is at an end when a flood has fwept every thing away .-- but as new plants will fpring up in the waste, and, if not instantly devoured, will again cover the ground with verdure, fo the industry of man, and his defire of comfort and confideration, will again accumulate in the hands of the diligent a greater proportion of the good things of life. In this infant state of the emerging remains of former cultivation, comforts, which the present inhabitants of Europe would look on with contempt, will be great, improper, and hazardous acquifitions. The principles which authorife the proposed dreadful equalifation will as justly entitle the idle or unfuccessful of future days to ftrip the posseffor of his advantages, and things must ever remain on their favage level.

III. I think that the imprefion which the infincerity of conduct of those instructors will leave on the mind, must be highly useful. They are evidently teaching what they do not believe themfelves----and here I do not confine my remark to their preparatory doctrines, which they afterwards explode. I make it chiefly with respect to their grand oftensible principle, which pervades the whole, a principle which they are obliged to adopt against their will. --They know that the principles of virtue are rooted in the heart, and that they can only be finothered----but did they pretend to eradicate them and proclaim bominem bomini lupum, all would fpurn at their instruction

inftruction. We are wheedled, by tickling our fancy with a notion that facred virtue is not only fecure; but that it is only in fuch hearts that it exerts its native energy. Senfible that the levelling maxims now fpoken of are revolting to the mind, the Illuminators are under the necessity of keeping us from looking at the fhocking picture, by displaying a beautiful scene of Utopian happiness-and they rock us afleep by the eternal lullaby of morality and univerfal philanthropy. Therefore the foregoing narration of the perfonal conduct of these instructors and reformers of the world, is highly useful. All this is to be brought about by the native lovelinefs of pure virtue, purged of the corruptions which fuperftitious fears have introduced, and also purged of the felfish thoughts which are avowed by the advocates of what their opponents call true religion. This is faid to hold forth eternal rewards to the good, and to threaten the wicked with dreadful punifhment. Experience has shown how inefficient such motives are. Can they be otherwise? say our Illuminators. Are they not addreffed to a principle that is ungenerous and felfish? But our doctrines, fay they, touch the hearts of the worthy. Virtue is beloved for her own fake, and all will yield to her gentle fway. But look, Reader, look at Spartacus the murderer, at Cato the keeper of poifons and the thief---Look at Tiberius, at Alcibiades, and the reft of the Bavarian Pandemonium. Look at poor Bahrdt. Go to France---look at Lequinio, at Condorcet*. Look

* De la Metherie fays, (Journ. de Phyf. Nov. 1792,) that Condorcet was brought up in the house of the old Duke of Rochefoucault, who treated him as his son-got Turgot to create a lucrative office for him, and raised him to all his eminence-yet he pursued him with malicious reports-and actually employed russians to also also finate him Yet is Condorcet's writing a model of humanity and tenderness.

at the Monfter Orleans. All were liars. Their divinity had no influence on their profligate minds. They only wanted to wheedle you, by touching the ftrings of humanity and goodness which are yet braced up in your heart, and which ftill yield fweet harmony if you will accompany their notes with those of religion, and neither clog them with the groveling pleafures of fenfe, nor damp the whole with the thought of eternal filence.

A most worthy and accomplished gentleman, who took refuge in this country, leaving behind him his. property, and friends to whom he was most tenderly attached, often faid to me that nothing fo much affected him as the revolution in the hearts of men. -Characters which were unfpotted, hearts thoroughly known to himfelf, having been tried by many things which fearch the inmost folds of felfishness or malevolence-in fhort, persons whole judgments were excellent, and on whofe worth he could have rested his honour and his life, so fascinated by the contagion, that they came at last to behold, and even to commit the most atrocious crimes with delight.---He used fometimes to utter a figh which pierced my heart, and would fay, that it was caufed by fome of those things that had come across his thoughts. He breathed his last among us, declaring that it was impoffible to recover peace of mind, without a total oblivion of the wickedness and miseries he had beheld. -What a valuable advice, " Let him that thinketh he ftandeth, take heed left he fall."---When the prophet told Hazael that he would betray his Prince, he exclaimed, " Is thy fervant a dog, that he fhould do fuch a thing ?" Yet next day he murdered him.

ftood in their way, and the wretch Marat, as well as the fleady villain Weifhaupt, faw that they could not proceed till they had eradicated all fentiments of of the moral government of the univerfe. Human nature, improved as it has been by religion, fhrunk from the tasks that were imposed, and it must therefore be brutalized --- The grand confederation was folemnly fworn to by millions in every corner of France---but, as Mirabeau faid of the declaration of the Rights of Man, it mult be made only the "Almanack of the bygone year"---Therefore Lequinio must write a book, declaring oaths to be nonfenfe, unworthy of San Culottes, and all religion to be a farce. Not long after, they found that they had fome use for a God---but he was gone---and they could not find another. Their conflictution was gone--and they have not yet found another. What is now left them on which they can depend for awing a man into a refpect for truth in his judicial declarations? what but the honour of a Citizen of France, who laughs at all engagements, which he has broken again and again ? Religion has taken off with her every fenfe of human duty. What can we expect but villainy from an Archbilhop of Paris and his chapter, who made a public profession that they had been playing the villains for many years, teaching what they thought to be a bundle of lies? What but the very thing which they have done, cutting each other's throats ?---Have not the enlightened citizens of France applauded the execution of their fathers? Have not the furies of Paris denounced their own children? But turn your eyes from the horrifying spectacle, and think on your own noble defcent and alliance. You are not the accidental productions of a fatal chaos, but the work of a Great Artift, creatures that are cared for, born to noble profpects, and conducted to them by the plaineft and and most fimple precepts, "to do justly, to love "mercy, and to walk humbly before God," not bewildered by the false and fluttering glare of French Philosophy, but conducted by this clear, fingle light, perceivable by all, "Do to others what you should "reasonably expect them to do to you."

- Think not the Mufe whole fober voice you hear, Contracts with bigot frown her fullen brow, Cafts round Religion's orb the mifts of Fear, Or fhades with horror what with fmiles fhould glow.
- No-fhe would warn you with feraphic fire, Heirs as ye are of Heaven's eternal day, Would hid you boldly to that Heaven afpire,
- Not fink and flumber in your cells of clay.
- Is this the bigot's rant ? Away, ye vain, Your doubts, your fears, in gloomy dulneis fleep ; Go-foothe your fouls in fickneis, death, or pain, With the fad folace of eternal fleep.
- Yet know, vain fceptics, know, th' Almighty Mind, Who breath'd on man a portion of his fire, Bade his free foul, by earth nor time confin'd, To Heaven, to immortality afpire.

Nor fhall this pile of hope his bounty rear'd, By vain philofophy be e'er deftroy'd ; Eternity, by all or hop'd or fear'd, Shall be by all or fuffer'd or enjoy'd.

The unfortunate Prince who has taken refuge in this kingdom, and whofe fituation among us is an illustrious mark of the generofity of the nation, and of the fovereignty of its laws, faid to one of the Gentleman about him, that "if this country was to "efcape the general wreck of nations, it would "owe its prefervation to Religion."—When this was doubted, and it was obferved, that there had not been wanting many Religionists in France : "True," " True," faid the Prince, "but they were not in earneft.—I fee here a ferious intereft in the thing. "The people know what they are doing when they go to church—they underftand fomething of it, and take an intereft in it." May his obfervation be juft, and his expectations be fulfilled !

IV. I would again call upon my countrywomen with the most earnest concern, and befeech them to confider this fubject as of more particular importance to themselves than even to the men .--- While woman is confidered as a respectable moral agent, training along with ourfelves for endless improvement; then, and only then, will fhe be confidered by lordly man as his equal ;---then, and only then, will fhe be allowed to have any rights, and those rights be respected. Strip women of this prerogative, and they become the drudges of man's indolence, or the pampered playthings of his idle hours, fubject to his caprices, and flaves to his mean paffions. Soon will their prefent empire of gallantry be over. It is a refinement of manners which fprang from Chriftianity; and when Chriftianity is forgotten, this artificial diadem will be taken from their heads, and unless they adopt the ferocious fentiments of their Gallic neighbours, and join in the general uproar, they will fink into the infignificance of the women in the turbulent republics of Greece, where they are never feen in the bufy haunts of men, if we except four or five, who, during the courfe of as many centuries, emerged from the general obfcurity, and appear in the hiftoric page, by their uncommon talents, and by the facrifice of what my fair countrywomen still hold to be the ornament of their fex. I would remind them, that they have it in their power to retain their prefent honourable flation in fociety. They are our early inftructors; and while mothers in the respectable respectable stations of life continued to inculcate on the tender minds of their fons a veneration for the precepts of Religion, their pliant children, receiving their instructions along with the affectionate careffes of their mothers, got impressions which long retained their force, and which protected them from the impulses of youthful passions, till ripening years fitted their minds for liftening to ferious instruction from their public teachers. Sobriety and decency of manners were then no flur on the character of a youth, and he was thought capable of struggling for independence, or pre-eminence, fit either for supporting or defending the state, although he was neither a toper nor a rake. 1 believe that no man who has feen thirty or forty years of life will deny that the manners of youth are fadly changed in this refpect. And, without prefuming to fay that this has proceeded from the neglect, and almost total ceffation of the moral education of the nurfery, I think myfelf well warranted, from my own observation, to fay that this education and the fober manners of young men have quitted us together.

Some will call this prudery, and croaking. But I am almost transcribing from Cicero, and from Quintilian. Cornelia, Aurelia, Attia, and other ladies of the first rank, are praised by Cicero only for their eminence in this respect; but not because they were fingular. Quintilian fays, that in the time immediately prior to his own, it had been the general practice of the ladies of rank to superintend the moral education both of fons and daughters. But of late, fays he, they are so engaged in continual and corrupting amusements, such as the shows of gladiators, horse-racing, and deep play, that they have no time, and have yielded their places to Greek governess and tutors, out cast

CHAP. IV.

What a noble fund of felf-estimation would our fair partners acquire to themfelves, if, by reforming the manners of the young generation, they should be the means of restoring peace to the world! They have it in their power, by the renewal of the good old cuftom of early inftruction, and perhaps still more, by impressing on the minds of their daughters the fame fentiments, and obliging them to refpect fobriety and decency in the youth, and pointedly to withhold their finiles and civilities from all who tranfgrefs thefe in the fmalleft degree. This is a method of proceeding that will most certainly be victorious. Then indeed will the women be the faviours of their country. While therefore the German fair have been repeatedly branded with having welcomed the French invaders*, let our ladies stand up for the honour of free-born Britons, by turning against the pretended enlighteners of the world, the arms which nature has put into their hands, and which those profligates have prefumptuoufly expected to

* I have met with this charge in many places; and one book in particular, written by a Pruflian General Officer, who was in the country over-run by the French troops, gives a detail of the conduct of the women that is very remarkable. He alfo fays, that infidelity has become very prevalent among the ladies in the higher circles. Indeed this melancholy account is to be found in many paffages of the private correspondence of the Illuminati.

employ in extending their influence over mankind. The empire of beauty is but thort, but the empire of virtue is durable; nor is there an instance to be met with of its decline. If it be yet possible to reform the world, it is possible for the fair. By the constitution of human nature, they must always appear as the ornament of human life, and be the objects of fondness and affection; so that if any thing can make head against the felfish and overbearing difpositions of man, it is his respectful regard for the fex. But mere fondnefs has but little of the rational creature in it, and we fee it harbour every day in the breast that is filled with the meanest and most turbulent passions. No where is it fo ftrong as in the harems of the eaft; and as long as the women afk nothing of the men but fondnefs and admiration, they will get nothing elfe-they will never be respected. But let them' roufe themfelves, affert their dignity, by fhewing their own elevated sentiments of human nature, and by acting up to this claim, and they may then command the world.

V. Another good confequence that should refult from the account that has been given of the proceedings of this confpiracy is, that fince the fascinating picture of human life, by which men have been wheedled into immediate anarchy and rebellion, is infincerc, and a mere artificial creature of the imagination, it can have no steadinefs, but must be changed by every freak of fancy, or by every ingenious fophist, who can give an equal plaufibility to whatever fuits his prefent views. It is as much an airy phantom as any other whim of Free Mafonry, and has no prototype, no original pattern in human nature, to which recourfe may always be had, to correct miftakes, and keep things in a conftant tenor. Has not France given the moft most unequivocal proofs of this? Was not the declaration of the Rights of Man, the production of their most brilliant Illuminators, a picture, in abstracto, where man was placed at a distance from the eye, that no false light of local fituation might pervert the judgment or engage the paffions? Was it not declared to be the master-piece of human wifdom? Did not the nation confider it at leifure? and, having it continually before their eyes, did they not, flep by flep, give their affent to the different articles of their Constitution, derived from it, and fabricated by their most choice Illuminators? And did not this Conftitution draw the applauses of the bright geniuses of other nations, who by this time were bufy in perfuading, each his countrymen, that they were ignoramufes in statistics, and patient flaves of oppression or of ancient prejudices? Did not panegyrics on it isfue from every garret in London? Where is it now? where is its fucceffor? Has any one plan of government subfisted, except while it was supported by the incontroulable and inexorable power of the guillotine? Is not the prefent administration of France as much as ever the object of discontent and of terror, and its coercions as like as ever to the fummary justice of the Parisian mob? Is there any probability of its permanency in a state of peace, when the fears of a foreign enemy no longer give a confolidation to their measures, and oblige them either to agree among themfelves, or immediately to perifh?

VI. The above accounts evince in the moft uncontrovertible manner the dangerous tendency of all myftical focieties, and of all affociations who hold fecret meetings. We fee that their uniform progrefs has been from frivolity and nonfenfe to wickednefs and fedition. Weifhaupt has been at

at great pains to shew the good effects of fecrecy in the Affociation, and the arguments are valid for this purpofe. But all his arguments are fo many diffusive advices to every thinking and fober mind. The man who really wifnes to difcover an abstruse truth will place himfelf, if possible in a calm fituation, and will by no means expose himfelf to the impatient hankering for fecrets and wonders-and he will always fear that a thing which refolutely conceals itself cannot bear the light. All who have ferioufly employed themfelves in the difcovery of truth have found the great advantages of open communication of fentiment. And it is against common fense to imagine that there is any thing of vaft importance to mankind which is yet a fecret, and which must be kept a fecret in order to be useful. This is against the whole experience of mankind--And furely to hug in one's breaft a fecret of fuch mighty importance, is to give the lie to all our professions of brotherly love. What a folecifm ! a fecret to enlighten and reform the whole world. We render all our endeavours impotent when we grafp at a thing beyond our power. Let an affociation be formed with a serious plan for reforming its own members, and let them extend in numbers in proportion as they fucceed-this might do fome good. But must the way of doing this be a fecret?-It may be to many—who will not look for it where it is to be found—It is this:

" Do good,-feek peace,-and purfue it."

But it is almost affronting the reader to suppose arguments necessary on this point. If there be a necessity for secrecy, the purpose of the affociation is either frivolous, or it is felfish.

2 U

Now

342. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

CHAP. IV.

Now, in either cafe, the danger of fuch fecret affemblies is manifest. Mere frivolity can never ferioufly occupy men come to age. And accordingly we fee that in every quarter of Europe where Free Mafoury has been established, the Lodges have become feed-beds of public mischief. I believe that no ordinary brother will fay that the occupations in the Lodges are any thing better than frivolous, very frivolous indeed. The diftribution of charity needs be no fecret, and it is but a very fmall part of the employment of the meeting. This being the cafe it is in human nature that the greater we suppose the frivolity of fuch an affociation to be, the greater is the chance of its ceasing to give fufficient occupation to the mind, and the greater is the rifk that the meetings may be employed to other purposes which require concealment. When this happens, felfintereft alone must prompt and rule, and now there is no length that fome men will not go, when they think themselves in no danger of detection and punifhment. The whole proceedings of the fecret societies of Free Masons on the Continent (and I am authorifed to fay, of fome Lodges in Britain) have taken one turn, and this turn is perfectly natural. In all countries there are men of licentious morals. Such men with to have a fafe opportunity of indulging their wits in fatire and farcasm; and they are pleased with the support of others. The defire of making profelytes is in every breaft-and it is whetted by the reftraints of fociety. And all countries have difcontented men, whofe grumblings will raise discontent in others, who might not have attended to fome of the triffing hardships and injuries they met with, had they not been reminded of them. To be difcontented, and not to think of schemes of redrefs, is is what we cannot think natural or manly—and where can fuch fentiments and fchemes find fuch fafe utterance and fuch probable fupport as in a fecret fociety? Free Mafonry is innocent of all thefe things; but Free Mafonry has been abufed, and at laft totally perverted—and fo will and muft any fuch fecret affociation, as long as men are licentious in their opinions or wicked in their difpofitions.

It were devoutly to be wifhed therefore that the whole fraternity would imitate the truly benevolent conduct of those German Lodges who have formally broken up, and made a patriotic facrifice of their amusement to the fastety of the state. I cannot think the facrifice great or costly. It can be no difficult matter to find as pleasing a way of passing a vacant hour-----and the charitable deeds of the members need not diminish in the smalless degree. Every perfon's little circle of acquaintance will give him opportunities of gratifying his kind dispositions, without the chance of being mistaken in the worth of the perfon on whom he bestows his favours. There is no occasion to go to St. Petersburg for a poor Brother, nor to India for a convert to Christianity, as long as we see for many sufferers and infidels among ourfelves.

But not only are fecret focieties dangerous, but all focieties whofe object is mysterious. The whole history of man is a proof of this position. In no age or country has there ever appeared a mysterious affociation which did not in time become a public nuifance. Ingenious or defigning men of letters have attempted to show that fome of the ancient mysteries were useful to mankind, containing rational doctrines of natural religion. This was the strong hold of Weishaupt, and he quotes the Eleusinian, the Pythagorean, and other mysteries. 344

teries. But furely their external figns and tokens were every thing that is flocking to decency and civil order. It is uncommon prefumption for the learned of the eighteenth century to pretend to know more about them than their contemporaries, the philosophers, the lawgivers of antiquity. These give no fuch account of them. I would defire any perfon who admires the ingenious differtations of Dr. Warburton to read a dull German book, call-Caracteristik der Mysterien der Altern, published at Frankfort in 1787. The author contents himfelf with a patient collection of every fcrap of every ancient author who has faid any thing about them. If the reader can fee any thing in them but the most absurd and immoral polytheism and fable, he must take words in a sense that is useles in reading any other piece of ancient compolition. I have a notion that the Dionyfiacs of Iona had some scientific secrets, viz. all the knowledge of practical mechanics which was employed by their architects and engineers, and that they were re. ally a Masonic Fraternity. But, like the Illuminati, they tagged to the fecrets of Masonry the fecret of drunkenness and debauchery; they had their Sister Lodges, and at last became rebels, subverters of the states where they were protected, till aiming at the dominion of all Ionia, they were attacked by the neighbouring states and dispersed. They were Illuminators too, and wanted to introduce the worfhip of Bacchus over the whole country, as appears in the account of them given by Strabo. Perhaps the Pythagoreans had alfo. fome-scientific secrets; but they too were Illuminators, and thought it their duty to overfet the State, and were themselves overset.

Nothing is fo dangerous as a myflic Affociation. The object remaining a fecret in the hands of the managers managers, the reft fimply put a ring in their own nofes, by which they may be led about at pleafure ; and ftill panting after the fecret, they are the better pleafed the lefs they fee of their way. A myftical object enables the leader to fhift his ground as he pleafes, and to accommodate himfelf to every current fashion or prejudice. This again gives him almost unlimited power; for he can make use of these prejudices to lead men by troops. He finds them already affociated by their prejudices, and waiting for a leader to concentrate their strength and set them in motion. And when once great bodies of men are set in motion, with a creature of their fancy for a guide, even the engineer himfelf cannot fay, "Thus far shalt thou "go, and no farther."

VII. We may alfo gather from what we have feen that all declamations on universal philanthropy are dangerous. Their natural and immediate effect on the mind is to increase the discontents of the unfortunate, and of those in the laborious rank's of life. No one, even of the Illuminators, will deny that those ranks must be filled, if fociety exists in any degree of cultivation whatever, and that there will always be a greater number of men who have no farther profpect. Surely it is unkind to put fuch men continually in mind of a flate in which they might be at their eafe; and it is unkindness unmixed, becaufe all the change that they will produce will be, that James will ferve John, who formerly was the fervant of James. Such declamations naturally tend to cause men to make light of the obligations and duties of common patriotifm, becaufe these are reprefented as fubordinate and inferior to the greater and more noble affection of universal benevolence. I do not pretend to fay that patrictifm is founded in a rationally perceived pre-eminence or excellence of the the fociety with which we are connected. But if it be a fact that fociety will not advance unlefs its members take an intereft in it, and that human nature improves only in fociety, furely this intereft fhould be cherifhed in every breaft. Perhaps national union arifes from national animofity ;—but they are plainly diftinguifhable, and union is not neceffarily productive of injuffice. The fame arguments that have any force against patriotifm are equally good against the preference which natural instinct gives parents for their children, and furely no one can doubt of the propriety of maintaining this in its full force, fubject however to the precife laws of juffice.

But I am in the wrong to adduce paternal or filial affection in defence of patriotifm and loyalty, fince even those natural inftincts are reprobated by the Illuminati, as hostile to the all-comprehending philanthropy. Mr. de la Metherie fays, that among the memorials fent from the clubs in England to the National Affembly, he read two, (printed,) in which the Affembly was requested to establish a community of wives, and to take children from their parents and educate them for the nation. In full compliance with this dictate of universal philanthropy, Weishaupt would have murdered his own child and his concubine,—and Orleans voted the death of his near relation.

Indeed, of all the confequences of Illumination, the moft melancholy is this revolution which it feems to operate in the heart of man,—this forcible facrifice of every affection of the heart to an ideal divinity, a mere creature of the imagination.—It feems a prodigy, 'yet it is a matter of experience, that the farther we advance, or vainly fuppofe that we do advance, in the knowledge of our mental powers, the increare our moral feelings flattened and done away. I remember

CHAP. IV. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

I remember reading, long ago, a differtation on the nurfing of infants by a French academician, be Cointre of Verfailles. He indelicately fupports his theories by the cafe of his own fon, a weak puny infant, whom his mother was obliged to keep continually applied to her bofom, fo that the rarely could get two hours of fleep during the time of fuckling him. Mr. Le Cointre fays, that the contracted for this infant " une partialite toute-a-fait deraisonable." -Plato, or Socrates, or Cicero, would probably have explained this by the habitual exercise of pity, a very endearing emotion .--- But our Academician, better illuminated, folves it by ftimuli on the papillæ and on the nerves of the fkin, and by the meeting of the humifying aura, &c. and does not feem to think that young Le Cointre was much indebted to his mother. It would amufe me to learn that this was the wretch Le Cointre, Major of the National Guards of Verfailles, who countenanced and encouraged the fhocking treafon and barbarity of those ruffians on the 5th and 6th of October 1789. Complete freezing of the heart would (I think) be the confequence of a theory which could perfectly explain the affections by vibrations or cryftallizations. --- Nay, any very perfect theory of moral feutiments must have fomething of this tendency .--- Perhaps the ancient fystems of moral philosophy, which were chiefly fearches after the fummum tonum, and fystems of moral duties, tended more to form and ftrengthen the heart, and produce a worthy man, than the most perfect theory of modern times, which explains every phenomenon by means of a nice anatomy of our affections.

So far therefore as we are really more illuminated, it may chance to give us an eafier victory over the natural or inftinctive attachments of mankind, and make the facrifice to universal philanthropy lefs coffly

coftly to the heart. I do not however pretend to fay that this is really the cafe : but 1 think myfelf fully warranted to fay, that increase of virtuous affections in general has not been the fruit of modern Illumination. I will not again ficken the reader, by calling his attention to Weifhaupt and his affociates or fuccessors. But let us candidly contemplate the world around us, and particularly the perpetual advocates of univerfal philanthropy. What have been the general effects of their continual declamations? Surely very melancholy; nor can it eafily be otherwife.-An ideal flandard is continually referred to. This is made gigantic, by being always feen indiffinctly, as through a mift, or rather a fluttering air. In comparison with this, every feeling that we have been accustomed to respect vanishes as infignificant; and, adopting the Jefuitical maxim; that "the great end fanclifies every mean," this fum of Cofmo-political good is made to eclipfe or cover all the prefent evils which must be endured for it. The fact now is, that we are become fo familiarifed with enormities, fuch as brutality to the weaker fex; cruelty to old age, wanton refinement on barbarity, that we now hear unmoved accounts of fcenes, from which, a few years ago, we would have fhrunk back with horror. With cold hearts, and a metaphyfical fcale, we measure the present miseries of our fellow creatures, and compare them with the accumulated miferies of former times, occafioned through a courfe of ages, and afcribed to the ambition of Princes. In this artificial manner are the atrocities of France ex= tennated; and we ftruggle, and partly fucceed, in reafoning ourfelves out of all the feelings which link men together in fociety.-The ties of father; hufband, brother, friend-all are abandoned for an emotion which we must even strive to excite,-univerfal philanthropy. But this is fad perverfion of nature.

CHAP. IV. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

nature." "He that loveth not his brother whom he " hath feen, how can he love God whom he hath not " feen ?" Still lefs can he love this ideal being, of which he labours to conjure up fome indiffinct and fleeting notion. It is also highly absurd; for, in trying to collect the circumstances which constitute the enjoyments of this Citizen of the World, we find ourfelves just brought back to the very moral feelings which we are wantonly throwing away. Weifhaupt allures us by the happiness of the patriarchal life as the fummum bonum of man. But if it is any thing more than eating and fleeping, and fquabbling with the neighbouring patriarchs, it must confist in the domeftic and neighbourly affections, and every other agreeable moral feeling, all which are to be had in our prefent flate, in greater abundance.

But this is all a pretence ;—the wicked corrupters of mankind have no fuch views of human felicity, nor would they be contented with it ; they want to intrigue and to lead ; and their patriarchal life anfwers the fame purpofe of tickling the fancy as the Arcadia of the poets. Horace flows the frivolity of thefe declamations, without formally enouncing the moral, in his pretty Ode,

Beatus ille qui procul negotiis.

The ufurer, after expatiating on this Arcadian felicity, hurries away to change, and puts his whole cafh again out to ufury.

Equally ineffective are the declamations of Cofmo-politifm on a mind filled with felfifh paffions; they just ferve it for a fubterfuge.—The ties of ordinary life are broken in the first place, and the Citizen of the World is a wolf of the defart.

The unhappy confequence is, that the natural progrefs of liberty is retarded. Had this ignis f_{a-2} V tuus tuus not appeared and mifled us, the improvements which true Illumination has really produced, the increafe in fciences and arts, and the improvement in our effimate of life and happinefs, would have continued to work filently and gradually in all nations; and those which are less fortunate in point of government would also have improved, by little and little, without losing any fensible portion of their prefent enjoyments in the possible portion of their honours, or power. Those pretensions would gradually have come to balance each other, and true liberty, such as Britons enjoy, might have taken place over all.

Inflead of this, the inhabitants of every flate are put into a fituation where every individual is alarmed and injured by the fuccefs of another, becaufe all pre-eminence is criminal. Therefore there muft be perpetual jealoufy and ftruggle. Princes are now alarmed, fince they fee the aim of the lower claffes, and they repent of their former liberal conceffions. All parties maintain a fullen diflance and referve; —the people become unruly, and the fovereign hard-hearted; fo that liberty, fuch as can be enjoyed in peace, is banifhed from the country.

VIII. When we fee how eagerly the Illuminati endeavoured to infinuate their Brethren into all offices which gave them influence on the public mind, and particularly into feminaries of education, we fhould be particularly careful to prevent them, and ought to examine with anxious attention the manner of thinking of all who offer themfelves for teachers of youth. There is no part of the fecret correfpondence of Spartacus and his Affociates, in which we fee more varied and artful methods for fecuring pupils, than in his own conduct refpecting the fludents in the Univerfity, and the injunctions he gives to others. There are two men, Socher and Drexl,

who had the general infpection of the fchools in the Electorate. They are treated by Spartacus as perfons of the greatest confequence, and the instructions given them flick at no kind of corruption. Weifhaupt is at pains, circuitous and mean arts, to induce young gentlemen to come under his care, and, to one whom he defcribes in another letter as a little master who must have much indulgence, he causes it to be intimated, that in the quarters where he is to be lodged, he will get the key of the ftreet-door, fo that he can admit whom he will. In all this canvaffing he never quits the great object, the forming the mind of the young man according to the principles of universal Liberty and Equality, and to gain this point, fcruples not to flatter, and even to excite his dangerous passions. We may be certain, that the zeal of Cofmo-politifm will operate in the fame way in other men, and we ought therefore to be folicitous to have all that are the inflructors of youth, perfons of the most decent manners. No question but fobriety and hypocrify may inhabit the fame breast. But its immediate effect on the pupil is at least fafe, and it is always eafy for a fensible parent to reprefent the reftrictions laid on the pupil by fuch a man as the effects of uncommon anxiety for his fafety. Whereas there is no cure for the lax principles that may fleal upon the tender mind that is not early put on its guard. Weishaupt undoubtedly thought that the principles of civil anarchy would be eafieft inculcated on minds, that had already shaken off the restraints of Religion, and entered into habits of fenfual indulgence, We shall be fafe if we truft his judgment in this matter.-We should be particularly observant of the character and principles of Men of Talents, who offer themselves for these offices, because their influence must be very great. Indeed this anxiety should extend tend to all offices which in any way give holders any remarkable influence on the minds of confiderable numbers. Such fhould always be filled by men of immaculate characters and approved principles; and, in times like the prefent, where the most effential questions are the subjects of frequent discussion, we should always confider with some distrust the men who are very cautious in declaring their opinions on these questions.

It is a great misfortune undoubtedly to feel ourfelves in a fituation which makes us damp the enjoyments of life with fo much fufpicion. But the hiftory of mankind flows us that many great revolutions have been produced by remote and apparently frivolous caufes. When things come to a height, it is frequently impoffible to find a cureat any rate medicina fero paratur, and it is much better to prevent the difeafe—principiis obfla—venienti occurrite morbo.

IX. Nor can it be faid that thefe are vain fears. We know that the enemy is working among us, and that there are many appearances in these kingdoms which ftrongly refemble the contrivance of this dangerous affociation. We know that before the Order of Illuminati was broken up by the Elector of Bavaria, there were feveral Lodges in Britain, and we may be certain that they are not all broken up. I know that they are not, and that within thefe two vears fome Lodges were ignorant or affected to be fo, of the corrupted principles and dangerous defigns of the Illuminati. The conflitution of the Order fliews that this may be, for the Lodges themfelves were illuminated by degrees. But I must remark, that we can hardly suppose a Lodge to be established in any place, unlefs there be fome very zealous Brother at hand to inftruct and direct it. And I think that a perfon can hardly be advanced as far as the rank

CHAP. IV. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

353 and be a fafe

rank of Scotch Knight of the Order, and be a fafe man either for our Church or State. I am very well informed, that there are feveral thousands of fubscribing Brethren in London alone, and we can hardly doubt, but that many of that number are well advanced. The vocabulary also of the Illuminati is current in certain focieties among us. Thefe focieties have taken the very name and conflitution of the French and German focieties. Corresponding-Affiliated --- Provincial --- Refcript --- Convention -----Reading Societies-- Citizen of the World---Liberty and Equality, the Imprescriptible Rights of Man, &c. &c. And must it not be acknowledged that our public arbiters of literary merit have greatly changed their manner of treatment of Theological and po-litical writings of late years? Till Paine's Age of Reafon appeared, the most fceptical writings of England kept within the bounds of decency and of argument, and we have not, in the courfe of two centuries, one piece that fhould be compared with many of the blackguard productions of the German preffes. Yet even those performances generally met with fharp reproof as well as judicious refutation. This is a tribute of commendation to which my country is most justly entitled. In a former part of my life I was pretty conversant in writings of this kind, and have feen almost every English performance of note. I cannot express the furprise and difgust which I felt at the number and the großsindecency of the German differtations which have come in my way fince I began this little hiftory,---and many of the titles which I obferve in the Leipzig catalogues are fuch as I think no British writer would make use of. I am told that the licentioufnefs of the prefs has been equally remarkable in France, even before the Revolution .--- May this fenfe of propriety and decency long continue to protect us, and fupport the national tional character for real good breeding, as our attainments in manly fcience have hitherto gained us the respect of the furrounding nations !

I cannot help thinking that British fentiment, or British delicacy, is changed; for Paine's book is treated by most of our Reviewers with an affected liberality and candour, and is laid before the public asquite new matter, and a fair field for discussion-and it strikes me as if our critics were more careful to let no fault of his opponents pafs unnoticed than to expose the futility and rudeness of this indelicate writer. In the reviews of political writings we see few of those kind endeavours. which real love for our conftitutional government would induce a writer to employ in order to leffen the fretful difcontents of the people; and there is frequently betrayed a fatisfaction at finding administration in straits, either through mifconduct or misfortune. Real love for our country and its government would (1 think) induce a perfon to mix with his criticifms fome fentiments of fympathy with the embarraffment of a minister loaded with the business of a great nation, in a fituation never before experienced by any minister. The critic would recollect that the minister was a man, fubject to error, but not necessarily nor altogether base. But it seems to be an assumed principle with fome of our political writers and reviewers that government must always be in fault, and that every thing needs a reform. Such were the beginnings on the continent, and we cannot doubt but that attempts are made to influence the public mind in this country, in the very way that has been practifed abroad .- Nay,

X. The deteftable doctrines of Illuminatifm have been openly preached among us. Has not Dr. Prieftley faid, (I think in one of his letters on the

the Birmingham riots,) "That if the condition of " other nations be as much improved as that of " France will be by the change in her fystem of " government, the great crifis, dreadful as it may " appear, will be a confummation devoutly to be " wifhed for ;---and though calamitous to many, " perhaps to many innocent perfons, will be even-" tually glorious and happy ?"-Is not this equivalent to Spartacus faying, "True-there will be " a ftorm, a convulfion-but all will be calm " again ?"-Does Dr. Prieftley think that the Britifh will part more eafily than their neighbours in France with their property and honours, fecured by ages of peaceable poffettion, protected by law, and acquiefced in by all who wish and hope that their own descendants may reap the fruits of their honeft industry ?--- Will they make a lefs manly ftruggle ?---Are they lefs numerous ?---Must his friends, his patrons, whom he has thanked, and praifed, and flattered, yield up all peaceably, or fall in the general ftruggle ? This writer has already given the most promising specimens of his own docility in the principles of Illuminatifm, and has already paffed through feveral degrees of initiation. He has refined and refined on Chriftianity, and boafts, like another Spartacus, that he has, at last, hit on the true fecret .- Has he not been preparing the minds of his readers for Atheifm by his theory of mind, and by his commentary on the unmeaning jargon of Dr. Hartley? I call it unmeaning jargon, that I may avoid giving it a more apposite and difgraceful name. For, if intelligence and defign be nothing but a certain modification of the vibratiunculæ or undulations of any kind, what is supreme intelligence, but a more extensive, and (perhaps they will call it) refined undulation, pervading or mixing 356

ing with all others? Indeed it is in this very manner that the universal operation of intelligence is pretended to be explained. As any new or partial undulation may be fuperinduced on any other already exifting, and this without the leaft difturbance or confusion, fo may the inferior intelligences in the universe be only superinductions on the operations of this fupreme intelligence which pervades them all,-And thus an undulation (of what? furely of fomething prior to and independent of this modification) is the caufe of all the beings in the universe, and of all the harmony and beauty that we observe,-And this undulation is the object of love, and gratitude, and confidence (that is, of other kinds of undulations.)-Fortunately all this has no meaning.-But furely, if any thing can tend to diminish the force of our religious fentiments, and make all Dr. Priestley's discoveries in Christianity infignificant, this will do it.

Were it possible for the departed foul of Newton to feel pain, he would furely recollect with regret that unhappy hour, when provoked by Dr. Hooke's charge of plagiarism, he first threw out his whim of a vibrating ether, to fhew what might be made of an hypothefis.-For Sir Isaac Newton must be allowed to have paved the way for much of the atomical philofophy of the moderns. Newton's æther is affumed as a fac totum by every precipitate fciolist, who, in defpite of logic, and in contradiction to all the principles of mechanics, gives us theories of muscular motion, of animal fensation, and even of intelligence and volition, by the undulations of ætherial fluids. Not one of a hundred of thefe theorifts can go through the fundamental theorem of all this doctrine, the 47th prop. of the 2d book of the Principia, and not one in a thousand know that Newton's investigation is inconclusive.-

Yet

Yet they talk of the effects and modifications of those undulations as familiarly and confidently as if they could demonstrate the propositions in Euclid's Elements.

Yet fuch is the reason that fatisfies Dr. Prieftly .--But I do not suppose that he has yet attained his acme of Illumination. His genius has been cramped by British prejudices.-These need not sway his mind any longer. He is now in that " rara temporis (et " loci) felicitate, ubi fentire quæ velis, et quæ sentias " dicere licet,"-in the country which was honoured by giving the world the first avowed edition of the Age of Reafon, with the name of the shop and publifher. I make no doubt but that his mind will now take a higher flight,-and we may expect to fee him fire "that train by which he boafted that he would " blow up the religious eftablishment of his flupid " and enflaved native country."-Peace be with him.-But I grieve that he has left any of his friends and abettors among us, who declaim, in the moft violent and unqualified terms, against all national Establishments of Religion, and in no friendly terms of any establishments which maintain or allow any privileged Orders. Difcanting much on fuch topics increases the diffatisfaction of the lefs fortunate part of mankind, who naturally repine at advantages which do not arife from the perfonal merit of the poffestor, although they are the natural and neceffary fruits of merit in their anceftors, and of the juffice and fecurity of our happy Conftitution. No well informed and fenfible man will deny that the greatest injury was done to pure Religion when Conflantine declared Chriftianity to be the Religion of the Empire, and vested the Church with all the riches and power of the Heathen Priefthood. But it is falfe that this was the fource of all or of the worfl corruptions of Christianity. The merest novice in Church History knows that the errors of the Gnoftics, of the Cerin-2Xthians, thians, and others, long preceded this event, and that thousands lost their lives in those metaphysical disputes. But I cannot help thinking that, in the present condition of Europe, religion would defert the world, if the opinions of men were not directed, in some proper degree, by National Establish-ments. Teachers among the Independents will court popularity, as they have always courted it; by fostering some favourite and discriminating opinion of their hearers. The old subjects of debate have now loft their zeft, and I fhould fear that the teachers would find it a fuccefsful, as it is an eafy road to popularity, to lead their hearers through a feries of refinements, till they are landed, much to their fatisfaction, in the Materialism of Dr. Priestley, from which it is but a flep to the Atheilin of Diderot and Condorcet.

Seeing that there are fuch grounds of apprehenfion, I think that we have caufe to be upon our guard, and that every man who has enjoyed the fweets of British liberty should be very anxious indeed to preferve it. We should discourage all fecret allemblies, which afford opportunities to the disaffected, and all conversations which foster any notions of political perfection, and create hankerings after unattainable happines. These only increase the discontents of the unfortunate, the idle, and the worthless.---Above all, we should be careful to discourage and check immorality and licentioufness in every shape. For this will of itself fubvert every government, and will subject us to the vile tyranny of a profligate mob.

XI. If there has ever been a feafon in which it was proper to call upon the public inflructors of the nation to exert themfelves in the caufe of Religion and Virtue, it is furely the prefent. It appears, from the tenor of the whole narration before the reader, reader, that Religion and Virtue arc confidered as the great obflacles to the completion of this plan for overturning the governments of Europe-and I hope that I have made it evident that those confpirators have prefuppofed that there is deeply rooted in the heart of man a fincere veneration for unsophisticated virtue, and an affectionate propenfity to Religion; that is, to confider this beautiful world as the production of wildom and power, refiding in a Being different from the world itself, and the natural object of admiration and of love —I do not speak of the truth of this princi-ple at present, but only of its reality, as an impression on the heart of man. These principles must therefore be worked on,-and they are acknowledged to be strong, because much art is employed to eradicate them, or to overwhelm them by other powerful agents .- We also fee that Religion and Virtue are confidered by those corrupters as closely united, and as mutually supporting each other. This they admit as a fact, and labour to prove it to be a mistake.—And lastly, they entertain no hopes of complete fuccess till they have exploded both.

This being the cafe, I hope that I shall be clear of all charge of impropriety, when I address our national instructors, and earnessly defire them to confider this cause as peculiarly theirs. The world has been corrupted under pretence of moral instruction.—Backwardness, therefore, on their part, may do inconceivable harm, because it will most certainly be interpreted as an acknowledgment of defeat, and they will be accused of indifference and infincerity. I know that a modest man reluctantly comes forward with any thing that has the appearance of thinking himself wifer or better than his neighbours. But if all are so has been corrupted to the second content of the se balhful, where will it end? Muft we allow a parcel of worthlefs profligates, whom no man would truft with the management of the moft trifling concern, to pafs with the ignorant and indolent for teachers of true wifdom, and thus entice the whole would into a trap? They have fucceeded with our unfortunate neighbours on the continent, and, in Germany, (to their fhame be it fpoken) they have been affifted even by fome faithlefs clergymen.

But I will hope better of my countrymen, and I think that our clergy have encouragement even from the native character of Britons. National comparifous are indeed ungraceful, and are rarely candidbut I think they may be indulged in this inflance. It is of his own countrymen that Voltaire fpeaks, when he fays, that "they refemble a mixed breed " of the monkey and the tiger," animals that mix fun with mifchief, and that fport with the torments of their prey.-They have indeed given the most shocking proofs of the justness of his portrait. It is with a confiderable degree of national pride, therefore, that I compare the behaviour of the French with that of the British in a very fimilar fituation, during the civil wars and the uturpation of Cromwell. There have been more numerous, and infinitely more atrocious, crimes committed in France during any one half year fince the beginning of the Revolution, than during the whole of that tumultuous period. And it fhould be remembered, that in Britain, at that period, to all other grounds of difcontent was added no fmall fhare of religious fanaticifm, a paffion (may I call it) which feldom fails to roufe every angry thought of the heart .- Much may be hoped for from an earnest and judicious addrefs to that rich fund of manly kindnefs that is confpicuous in the British character,-a fund to which I am perfuaded we owe the excellence of our conflicutional al government---No where elfe in Europe are the claims of the different ranks in fociety fo generally and fo candidly admitted. All feel their force, and all allow them to others. Hence it happens that they are enjoyed in fo much peace----hence it happens that the gentry live among the yeomen and farmers with fo eafy and familiar a fuperiority :

Justitia excedens terris vestigia fecit.

Our clergy are also well prepared for the task. For our anceitors differed exceedingly from the prefent Illuminators in their notions, and have enacted that the clergy shall be well instructed in natural philofophy, judging that a knowledge of the fymmetry of nature, and the beautiful adjustment of all her operations, would produce a firm belief of a wifdom and power which is the fource of all this fair order, the Author and Conductor of all, and therefore the natural object of admiration and of love. A good heart is open to this impreffion, and feels no reluctance, but on the contrary a pleafure, in thinking man the fubject of his government, and the object of his care. This point being once gained, I should think that the falutary truths of Religion will be highly welcome. I fhould think that it will be eafy to convince fuch minds, that in the midit of the immenfe variety of the works of God there is one great plan to which every thing feems to refer, namely, the crowding this world, to the utmost degree of possibility, with life, with beings that enjoy the things around them, each in its own degree and manner. Among thefe, man makes 2 most confpicuous figure, and the maximum of his enjoyments feems a capital article in the ways of Providence. It will, I think, require little trouble to fnew that the natural dictates of Religion, or the immediate refults of the belief of God's moral

ral government of the univerfe, coincide in every circumflance of fentiment, difpofition, and conduct, with those that are most productive of enjoyment (on the whole) in focial life. The fame train of thought will shew, that the real improvements in the pleasures of fociety, are, in fact, improvements of man's rational nature, and fo many steps toward that perfection which our own confciences tell us we are capable of, and which Religion encourages us to hope for in another state of being.—-And thus will "the ways of Wisdom appear to be ways of plea-"fantnels, and all her paths to be peace."

Dwelling on fuch topics, there is no occasion for any political difcuffion. This would be equally improper and hurtful. Such difcuffions never fail to produce ill-humour.-But furely the higheft complacence must refult from the thought that we are co-operating with the Author of all wifdom and goodnefs, and helping forward the favourite plans of his providence. Such a thought must elevate the mind which thus recognifes a fort of alliance with the Author of nature.-Our brethren in fociety appear brethren indeed, heirs of the fame hopes, and travelling to the fame country. This will be a fort of moral patriotifm, and fhould, I think, produce mutual forbearance, fince we discover imperfections in all creatures, and are confcious of them in our~ felves-notwithstanding which, we hope to be all equal at last in worth and in happiness.

I fhould gladly hope that I fhall not be accufed of prefumption in this addrefs. There is no profeffion that I more fincerely refpect than that of the religious and moral inftructor of my country. I am faying nothing here that I am not accuflomed to urge at much greater length in the courfe of my profeffional duty. And I do not think that I am juftly chargeable with vanity, when I fuppofe that many years of delightful fludy of the works of God have given given me fomewhat more acquaintance with them than is probably attained by thofe who never think of the matter, being continually engaged in the buffle of life. Should one of this defcription fay that all is fate or chance, and that " the fame thing " happens to all," &c. as is but too common, I fhould think that a prudent man will give fo much preference to my affertion, as at leaft to think ferioufly about the thing, before he allow himfelf any indulgence in things which I affirm to be highly dangerous to his future peace and happinefs.——For this reafon I hope not to be accufed of going out of my line, nor hear any one fay " N: futor ultra cre-" pidam." The prefent is a feafon of anxiety, and it is the duty of every man to contribute his mite to the general good.

It is in fome fuch hopes that I have written thefe pages; and if they have any fuch effect, I fhall think myfelf fortunate in having by chance hit on fomething ufeful, when I was only trying to amufe myfelf during the tedious hours of bad health and confinement. No perfon is more fenfible of the many imperfections of this performance than my-felf. But, as I have no motive for the publication but the hopes of doing fome good, I truft that I shall obtain a favourable acceptance of my endeavours from an intelligent, a candid, and a good-natured public. I must entreat that it be remembered that thefe sheets are not the work of an author determined to write a book. They were for the most part notes, which I took from books I had borrowed, that I might occasionally have recourse to them when occupied with Free Mafonry, the first object of my curiofity. My curiofity was diverted to ma-ny other things as I went along, and when the Illuminati came in my way, I regretted the time I had thrown away on Free Mafonry .- But, obferving their their connection, I thought that I perceived the progrefs of one and the fame defign. This made me eager to find out any remains of Weilhaupt's Affociation. I was not furprized when I faw marks of its interference in the French Revolution.-In hunting for clearer proofs I found out the German Union-and, in fine, the whole appeared to be one great and wicked project, fermenting and working over all Europe .--- Some highly respected friends encouraged me in the hope of doing fome fervice by laying my informations before the public, and faid that no time flould be loft .--- I therefore fet about collecting my feattered facts .--- I undertook this tafk at a time when my official duty preffed hard on me, and bad health made me very unfit for fludy .--- The effects of this must appear in many faults, which I fee, without being able at prefent to amend them. I owe this apology to the public, and I truft that my good intentions will procure it acceptance*.

Nothing

* While the flect commencing p. 341 was printing off, I got a fight of a work published in Paris last year entitled La Conjuration d'Orleans. It confirms all that I have faid respecting the use made of the Free Mason Lodges.—It gives a particular account of the formation of the Jacobin Club, by the Club Breton. This last appears to have been the Association formed with the affistance of the German deputies. The Jacobin Club had feveral committees, fimilar to those of the National Association. Among others, it had a Committee of Enquiry and Correspondence, whose business it was to gain partizans, to discover enemies, to decide on the merits of the Brethren, and to form fimilar Clubs in other places.

The author of the above-mentioned work writes as follows, (vol. iii. p. 19.) We may judge of what the D. of Orleans could do in other places, by what he did during his flay in England. During his flay in London, he gained over to his intereft Lord Stanhope and Dr. Price, two of the most respectable members of the Revolution Society. This Society had no other object Nothing would give me more fincere pleafure than to fee the whole proved to be a miftake;—to be convinced that there is no fuch plot, and that we run no rifk of the contagion; but that Britain will continue, by the abiding prevalence of honour, of virtue, and of true religion, to exhibit the faireft fpecimen of civil government that ever was feen on earth, and a national character and conduct not unworthy of the ineftimable bleflings that we enjoy. Our excellent Sovereign, at his acceffion to the throne, declared to his Parliament that HE GLORIED IN HAVING BEEN BORN A BRITON.---Would to God that object (it faid) but to fupport the Revolution, which had driven sames II. from the throne of his ancestors.

Orleans made of this affociation a true Jacobin Club.—It entered into correspondence with the Committee of Enquiry of our Commune, with the fame Committee of our Jacobin Club, and at last with our National Affembly. It even fent to the Affembly an oftenfible letter, in which we may fee the following passages:

"The Society congratulate the National Affembly of France on the Revolution which has taken place in that country. It cannot but earneftly with for the happy conclution of fo important a Revolution, and, at the fame time, express the extreme fatisfaction which it feels in reflecting on the glorious example which France has given to the world." (The Reader will remark, that in this example are contained all the horrors which had been exhibited in France before the month of March 1790; and that before this time, the conduct of the Duke of Orleans on the 5th and 6th of October 1789, with all the flocking atrocities of those days, were fully known in England.)

"The Society refolves unanimoufly to invite all the people of England to establish Societies through the kingdom, to support the principles of the Revolution, to form correspondence between themselves, and by these means to establish a great concerted Union of all the true Friends of Liberty."

Accordingly (fays the French author) this was executed, and Jacobin Clubs were established in feveral cities of England, Scotland, and Ireland. 2 Y that all and each of his fubjects had entertained the fame lofty notions of this good fortune! Then would they have laboured, as he has done for near forty years, to fupport the honour of the Britifh name by fetting as bright an example of domeftic and of public virtue.---Then would Britons have been indeed the boaft of humanity---then we fhould have viewed thefe wicked plots of our neighbours with a fmile of contempt, and of fincere pity---and there would have been no need of this imperfect but well-meant performance.

Postscript.

LTHOUGH I faw no reason to doubt of the validity of the proofs which I have offered in the preceding pages, of a confpiracy against the dearest interests of every nation of Europe, nor of the importance of the information to my own countrymen, it gives me great satisfaction to learn that it has been received with favour and indulgence. This I may conclude from the impreffion's being exhausted in a few days, and becaule the publisher informs me that another edition is wanted immediately. I could have wifhed that this were deferred for fome time, that I might have availed myself of the observations of others, and be enabled to correct the miftakes into which I have been led by my fcanty knowledge of the German language, and the miftakes of the writers from whom I derived all my informations. I fhould, in that cafe, have attempted to make the work more worthy of the public eye, by correcting many imperfections, which the continual diffraction of bad health, and my hafte to bring it before the public, have occasioned. I should have made the disposition more natural and perfpicuous, and have lopped off fome redundances and repetitions. But the printer tells me, that this would greatly retard the publication, by changing the feries of the pages. At any rate, I am not at prefent in a condition to engage in any work that requires difpatch. I must yield therefore to those reasons, and content myself with fuch corrections as can be made immediately.

I have found, after minute enquiry, that I was miftaken as to the expression of an eminesit follower follower of Dr. Prieftley, mentioned before. The perfon alluded to difclaims all fanguinary proceedings, and my information arofe from a very erroneous account which was circulated of the converfation. But I ftill think the caution equally neceffary, which I recommended to the hearers of the frequent and violent declamations made by those alluded to, against all religious establishments.

Except the anecdote of Diderot's library, I do not recollect another affertion in the book, for which I have not the authority of printed evidence. This flory was told me by fo many perfons of credit, who were on the fpot at the time, that I have no doubt of its truth.

I alfo find that I was miftaken in my conjecture that Mr. Le Franc communicated his fufpicions of the horrid defigns of the Free Mafons to Archbifhop Gobet. It muft have been to Mr. Le Clerc de Juigne, a moft worthy prelate, whom the hatred of the Jacobins obliged to fly into Switzerland. The Catholic clergy were butchered or banifhed, and the Jacobins fubfituted in their places fuch as would fecond their views. Gobet was worthy of their confidence, and the Archbifhop of Thouloufe (Brienne) himfelf could not have ferved the caufe of the philofophifts more effectually, had they fucceeded in their attempts to get him continued Archbifhop of Paris.

As the poetical picture of unqualified Liberty and Equality, and the indolent pleafures of the patriarchal life, are the charm by which the Illuminators hope to fafcinate all hearts, and as they reprobate every conftruction of fociety which tolerates any permanent fubordination, and particularly fuch as found this fubordination on diftinctions tinctions of ranks, and fcout all privileges allowed to particular orders of men, I hope that it will not be thought foreign to the general purpofe of the foregoing Work, if, I with great defer-ence, lay before the Reader fome of my reafons for afferting, without hefitation, in a former part, that the British constitution is the only one that will give permanent happiness to a great and luxurious nation, and is peculiarly calculated to give full exercife to the best propensities of cultivated minds. I am the more defirous of doing this, becaufe it feems to me that most of the political writers on the Continent, and many of my countrymen, have not attended to important circumftances which diftinguish our constitution from the States General of France and other countries. The republicans in France have, fince the Revolution, employed the pains in fearching their records, which ought to have been taken before the convocation of the States, and which would probably have prevented that ftep altogether. They have shewn that the meetings of the States, if we except that in 1614 and 1483, were uni-formly occasions of mutual contests between the different Orders, in which the interests of the nation and the authority of the Crown were equally forgotten, and the kingdom was plunged into all the horrors of a rancorous civil war. Of this they give us a remarkable inftance during the captivity of King John in 1355 and 1356, the horrors of which were hardly exceeded by any thing that has happened in our days. They have shewn the fame difinal confequences of the affembly of the different Orders in Brabant; and still more remarkably in Sweden and Denmark, where they have frequently produced a revolution and change of government, all of which have terminated nated in the abfolute government, either of the Crown, or of one of the contending Orders. They laugh at the fimplicity of the British for expecting that the permanent fruits of our constitution, which is founded on the fame jarring principles, shall be any better; and affert, that the peaceable exercise of its several powers for somewhat more than a century, (a thing never experienced by us in former times,) has proceeded from circumflauces merely accidental. With much address they have felected the former diffurbances, and have connected them by a fort of principle, fo as to fupport their fystem, "that a States General " or Parliament, confifting of a reprefentation of " the different classes of citizens, can never deli-" berate for the general good, but must always " occupy their time in contentions about their " mutual invations of privilege, and will faddle " every aid to the executive power, with fome 66 unjust and ruinous aggraudifement of the victorious Order." They have the effrontery to 66 give the MAGNA CHARTA as an inftance of an usurpation of the great feudatories, and have reprefented it in fuch a light as to make it the game of their writers and of the tribunes .-- All this they have done in order to reconcile the minds of the few thinking men of the nation to the abolition of the different Orders of the State, and to their National Convention in the form of a chaotic mafs of Frenchmen, one and indivisible :

Non bene junctarum difcordia femina rerum, Ubi frigida puegnabant calidis, humentia ficcis, Mollia cum duris, fine pondere habentia pondus.

Their reasonings would be just, and their proofs from history would be convincing, if their premises mifes were true; if the British Parliament were really an affembly of three Orders, either perfonally, or by representation, deliberating apart, each having a veto on the decisions of the other two. And I apprehend that most of my countrymen, who have not had occasion to canvas the subject with much attention, suppose this to be really the British Constitution: for, in the ordinary table conversations on the subject, they feldom go farther, and talk with great complacence of the balance of hostile powers, of the King as the umpire of differences, and of the peace and prosperity that refults from the whole.

But I cannot help thinking that this is a mifconception, almost in every circumstance. I do not know any opposite interests in the State, except the general one of the governor and the governed, the king and the subject .--- If there is an umpire in our conftitution, it is the houfe of Lords-but this is not as a reprefentation of the perfons of birth, but as a court of hereditary magistrates: the Peers do not meet to defend their own privileges as citizens, but either as the counfellors of the King, or as judges in the last refort. The privileges for which we fee them fometimes contend, are not the privileges of the high-born, of the great vaffals of the Crown, but the privileges of the Houfe of Lords, of the fupreme Court of Judicature, or of the King's Council. In all the nations on the Continent, the different Orders, as they are called, of the State, are corporations, bodies politic, which have jurifdiction within themfelves, and rights which they can maintain at their own hand, and privileges which mark them most distinctly, and produce such a complete feparation between the different Orders, that they can no more mix than oil and water. Yet the great great prefident Montesquieu fays, that the Peerage of England is a body of Nobility; and he uses the term body in the strict fenfe now mentioned, as fynonymous to corporation. He has repeatedly used this term to denote the fecond order of Frenchmen, perfons of noble birth, or ennobled, (that is, vested in the privileges and distinctions of the nobly born,) united by law, and having authority to maintain their privileges. The hiftory of France, nay of our own country, flows us that this body may enjoy all its diffinctions of nobility, and that the Great Barons may enjoy the prerogatives of their baronies, although the authority of the Crown is almost annihilated .- We have no cogent reason, therefore, for thinking that they will be conftantly careful to support the authority of the Crown; and much lefs to believe that they will, at the fame time, watch over the liberties of the people. In the election of their reprefentatives, (for the whole body of the gentlemen must appear by reprefentation,) we must not expect that they will felect fuch of their own number as will take care of those two essential objects of our conflitution.—Equally jealous of the authority of the Crown and of the encroachments of all those who are not gentlemen, and even fearful of the affumptions of the Great Barons, the powerful individuals of their own order, they will always choofe fuch representatives as will defend their own rights in the first place. Such perfons are by no means fit for maintaining the proper authority of the Crown, and keeping the reprefentatives of the lower claffes within proper bounds.

But this is not the nature of our House of Lords in the present day. It was so formerly in a great measure, and had the same effects as in other countries. But since the Revolution, the Peers of Great-Britain have no important privileges which relate merely or chiefly to birth. Thefe all refer to their functions as Magistrates of the Supreme Court. The King can, at any time, place in this Houfe any eminent perfon whom he thinks worthy of the office of hereditary magistrate. The Peers are noble-that is, remarkable, illustrious; but are not neceffarily, nor in every inftance, perfons of high birth. This Houfe therefore is not, in any fort, the reprefentative of what is called in France the Nobleffe-a particular caft of the nation ;---nor is it a junction of the proprietors of the great fees of the Crown, as fuch ;- for many, very many, of the greatest baronies are in the hands of those we call Commoners .- They fit as the King's Counfellors, or as Judges .- Therefore the members of our Upper House are not swayed by the prejudices of any class of the citizens. They are hereditary magiftrates, created by the Sovereign, for his counfel, to defend his prerogatives, to hold the balance between the throne and the people. The greatest part of the Nobility (in the continental fense of the word) are not called into this House, but they may be members of the Lower Houfe, which we call the Commons; nay the fons and the brothers of the Peers are in the fame fituation. The Peers therefore cannot be hoftile or indifferent to the liberty, the rights, or the happiness of the Commons, without being the enemies of their own families.

Nor is our Houfe of Commons at all fimilar to the Third Eftate of any of the neighbouring kingdoms. They are not the reprefentatives of the ignobly born, or of any clafs of citizens. The members are the proper reprefentatives of the whole nation, and confift of perfons of every clafs, perfons of the higheft birth, perfons of great fortune, perfons of education, of knowledge, of talents.

POSTSCRIPT.

Thus the caufes of diffention which refer to the diffinctive rights or prerogatives of the different claffes of citizens are removed, becaufe in each House there are many individuals felected from all the claffes.

A Peer, having attained the higheft honours of the ftate, must be an enemy to every revolution. Revolution must certainly degrade him, whether it places an absolute monarch, or a democratic junto, on the throne.

The Sovereign naturally looks for the fupport of the Upper Houle, and in every measure agreeable to the conftitution, and to the public weal, exerts his influence on the House of Commons. Here the character of the monarch and his choice of ministers must appear, as in any other constitution; but with much lefs chance of danger to political liberty.-The great engine of monarchy in Europe, has been the jarring privileges of the different Orders; and the Sovereign, by fiding with one of them, obtained acceffions of prerogative and power.-It was thus that, under the House of Tudor, our conftitution advanced with hafty ftrides to abfolute monarchy; and would have attained it, had James the First been as able as he was willing to fecure what he firmly believed to be the divine rights of his Crown.

I do not recollect hearing the lower ranks of the State venting much of their difcontents against the Peers, and they feem to perceive pretty clearly the advantages arifing from their prerogatives. They feem to look up to them as the first who will protect them against the agents of fovereignty. They know that a man may rife from the lowest flation to the peerage, and that in that exaltation he remains connected with themselves by the deareft eft ties; and the Houfe of Commons take no offence at the creation of new Peers, becaufe their privileges as a Court, and their private rights, are not affected by it. Accordingly, the Houfe has always oppofed every project of limiting the King's prerogative in this refpect.

How unlike is all this to the conftitution confifting of the pure reprefentatives of the Privileged Orders of the Continental States. The felf-conceited conftitutionalists of France faw fomething in the British Parliament which did not fall in with their own basty notions, and prided themselves in not copying from us. This would have indicated great poverty of invention in a nation accuftomed to confider itself as the teacher of mankind. The most fensible of them, however, wished to have a conflitution which they called an improvement of ours: and this was the fimple plan of a representation of the two or three Orders of the State. Their Upper House should contain the representatives of 100,000 nobleffe. The Princes of the Blood and Great Barons should fit in it of their own right, and the reft by deputies. The Lower Houfe, or Tiers Etat, should confist of deputies from those ignobly born; fuch as merchants, perfons in the lower offices of the law, artifans, peafants, and a fmall number of freeholders. Surely it needs no deep reflection to teach us what fort of deliberations would occupy fuch a houfe. It would be a most useful occupation however, to peruse the history of France, and of other nations, and fee what really did occupy the Tiers Etat thus constructed, and what were their proceedings, their decisions, and the steps which they took to make them effectual. I have no doubt but that this fludy would cure most of our advocates for general eligibility, and for general fuffrage. I have lately read read Velley and Villaret's Hiftory of France, (by the bye, the Abbé Barruel has fhewn that the Club d'Holbach managed the publication of this Hiftory after the first eight or ten volumes, and flipped into it many things fuited to their impious project,) and the accounts of the troublefome reigns of John, and Charles his fucceffor, by authors who wrote long before the Revolution; and they filled me with horror. The only inftance that I met with of any thing like moderation in the claims and difputes of the different Orders of their States General, and of patriotifm, or regard for the general interefts of the State, is in their meetings during the minority of Charles VIII.

With refpect to the limitations of the eligibility into the Houfe of Commons, I think that there can be no doubt that those should be excluded whose habits of needy and laborious life have precluded them from all opportunities of acquiring some general views of political relations. Such perfons are totally unfit for deliberations, where general or comprehensive views only are to be the subjects of difcussion; they can have no conceptions of the subject, and therefore no steady notions or opinions, but must change them after every speaker, and must become the dupes of every demagogue.

But there are other circumftances which make me think that, of all the claffes of citizens, the land proprietors are the fitteft for holding this important office. I do not infer this from their having a more real connection with the nation, and a ftronger intereft in its fate—I prefer them on account of their general habits of thought. Almost all their ordinary transactions are fuch as make them acquainted with the interests of others, cause them to consider those in general points of view; and, in fhort, most of of their occupations are, in fome degree, national. They are accustomed to settle differences between those of lower stations-they are frequently in the King's commission as Justices of the Peace. All these circumstances make them much apter scholars in that political knowledge, which is abfolutely neceffary for a member of the Houfe of Commons. But, befides this, I have no hefitation in faying that their turn of mind, their principles of conduct, are more generally fuch as become a Senator, than those of any other class of men. This class includes almost all men of family. I cannot help thinking that even what is called family pride is a fentiment in their favour. I am convinced that all our propenfities are ufeful in fociety, and that their bad effects arife wholly from want of moderation in the indulgence of them, or fometimes from the impropriety of the occasion on which they are exerted. What propenfity is more general than the defire of acquiring permanent confideration for ourfelves and our families? Where is the man to be found fo meanfpirited as not to value himfelf for being born of creditable parents, and for creditable domeftic connections? Is this wrong becaufe it has been abufed? So then is every pre-eminence of office; and the directors of republican France are as criminal as her former Nobles. This propenfity of the human heart should no more be rejected than the defire of power. It should be regulated-but it should certainly be made use of as one of the means of carrying on the national bufinefs. I think that we know fome of its good effects-It incites to a certain propriety of conduct that is generally agreeable-its honefty is embellished by a manner that makes it more pleafing. There is fomething that we call the behaviour of a Gentleman that is immediatly and uniformly understood. The plainest peasant or labourer will fay of a man whom he efteems in a certain way, "He is a Gentleman, every bit of him," and he is perfectly underftood by all who hear him to mean, not a rank in life, but a turn of mind, a tenor of conduct that is amiable and worthy, and the ground of confidence.—I remark, with fome feeling of patriotic pride, that thefe are phrafes almost peculiar to our language—in Russia the words would have no meaning. But there, the Sovereign is a defpot, and all but the Gentry are flaves; and the Gentry are at no pains to recommend their class by fuch a distinction, nor to give currency to fuch a phrafe.—I would infer from this peculiarity, that Britain is the happy land, where the wifest use has been made of this propensity of the human heart.

If therefore there be a foundation for this peculiarity, the Gentry are proper objects of our choice for filling the House of Commons.

If theoretical confiderations are of any value in queftions of political difcuffion, I would fay, that we have good reasons for giving this class of citizens a great share in the public deliberations. Besides what I have already noticed of their habits of confidering things in general points of view, and their feeling a closer connection with the nation than any other class, I would fay that the power and influence which naturally attach to their being called to offices of public truft, will probably be better lodged in their hands. If they are generally felected for thefe offices, they come to confider them as parts of their civil condition, as fituations natural to them. They will therefore exercise this power and influence with the moderation and calmness of habit,-they are no novelties to them-they are not afraid of lofing them; -therefore, when in office, they do not catch at the opportunities of exercifing them. This is the ordinary nary conduct of men, and therefore is a ground of probable reafoning.—In fhort, I fhould expect from our Gentry fomewhat of generofity and candour, which would temper the commercial principle, which feems to regulate the national transactions of modern Europe, and whose effects feem less friendly to the best interests of humanity, than even the Roman principle of glory.

The Reader will now believe that I would not recommend the filling the Houfe of Commons with merchants, although they feem to be the natural Reprefentatives of the monied interest of the nation. But I do not with to confider that House as the Reprefentative of any Orders whatever, or to difturb its deliberations with any debates on their jarring interests. The man of purely commercial notions difclaims all generofity-recommends honefty be-caufe it is the beft policy-in fhort, " places the " value of a thing in as much money as'twillbring." I should watch the conduct of fuch men more narrowly than that of the Nobles. Indeed, the hiftory of Parliament will show that the Gentry have not been the most venal part of the House. The Illumination which now dazzles the world aims directly at multiplying the number of venal members, by filling the fenates of Europe with men who may be bought at a low price. Ministerial corruption is the fruit of Liberty, and freedom dawned in this nation in Queen Elizabeth's time, when her minister bribed Wentworth .- A wife and free Legiflation will endeavour to make this as expensive and troublefome as poffible, and therefore will neither admit universal suffrage nora very extensive eligibility. These two circumstances, besides opening a wider door to corruption, tend to deftroy the very intention of all civil constitutions. The great object in them them is, to make a great number of people happy. Some men place their chief enjoyment in measuring their ftrength with others, and love to be continually employed in canvaffing, intriguing, and carrying on fome little pieces of a fort of public business; to fuch men univerfal fuffrage and eligibility would be paradife-but it is to be hoped that the number of fuch is not very great : for this occupation must be accompanied by much difquiet among their neighbours, much diffension, and mutual offence and illwill-and the peaceable, the indolent, the fludious, and the half of the nation, the women, will be great fufferers by all this. In a nation poffeffing many of the comforts and pleasures of life, the happiest government is that which will leave the greatest number poffible totally unoccupied with national affairs, and at full liberty to enjoy all their domeftic and focial pleafures, and to do this with fecurity and permanency. Great limitations in the right of electing feems therefore a circumstance necessary for this purpose; and limitations are equally neceffary on the eligibility. When the offices of power and emolument are open to all, the fcramble becomes univerfal, and the nation is never at peace. The road to a feat in Parliament should be accessible to all; but it fhould be long, fo that many things, which all may in time obtain, shall be requifite for qualifying the candidate. The road fhould also be such that all should be induced to walk in it, in the profecution of their ordinary bufinefs; and their admission into public offices should depend on the progrefs which they have made in the advancement of their own fortunes. Such regulations would, I think, give the greatest chance of filling the offices with perfons fitteft for them, by their

CHAP. II.

Then let us reflect that it is woman that is to grace the whole—It is in nature, it is the very conftitution of man, that woman, and every thing connected with woman, muft appear as the ornament of life. That this mixes with every other focial fentiment, appears from the conduct of our fpecies in all ages and in eve y fituation. This I prefume would be the cafe even though there were no qualities in the fex to juffify it. This fentiment refpecting the fex is neceffary, in order to rear fo helplefs, fo nice, and fo improveable a creature as man; without it, the long abiding tafk could not be performed :—and I think that I may venture to fay that it is performed in the different fates of fociety nearly in proportion as this preparatory and indifpenfable fentiment is in force.

On the other hand, I think it no lefs evident that it is the defire of the women to be agreeable to the men, and that they will model themfelves according to what they think will pleafe. Without this adjustment of fentiments by nature, nothing would go on. We never obferve any fuch want of fymmetry in the works of God. If, therefore, those who take the lead, and give the fashion in fociety, were wise and virtuous, I have no doubt but that the women would fet the brightest pattern of every thing that is excellent. But if the men are nice and fastidious fenfualists, the women will be refined and elegant voluptuaries.

There is no deficiency in the female mind, either in talents or in difpolitions; nor can we fay with certainty that there is any fubject of intellectual or moral difcuffion in which women have not excelled. If the delicacy of their conftitution, and other phyfical caufes, allow the female fex a fmaller fhare of fome mental powers, they poffefs others in a fuperior degree, which are no lefs refpectable in their own nature, and of as great importance to fociety. Inftead of defcanting at 2 A lar; e large on their powers of mind, and fupporting my affertions by the inflances of a Hypatia, a Schurman, a Zenobia, an Elizabeth, &c. I may repeat the account given of the fex by a perfon of uncommon experience, who faw them without difguife, or any motive that could lead them to play a feigned part—Mr. Ledyard, who traverfed the greateft part of the world, for the mere indulgence of his tafte for obfervation of human nature; generally in want, and often in extreme mifery.

" I have (fays he) always remarked that women, " in all countries, are civil, obliging, tender, and hu-" mane: that they are ever inclined to be gay and " cheerful, timorous and modeft; and that they do " not hefitate, like men, to perform a kind or gene-" rous action .- Not haughty, not arrogant, not fu-" percilious, they are full of courtefy, and fond of fociety-more liable in general to err than man, but 66 " in general, alfo, more virtuous, and performing 66 more good actions than he. To a woman, whether civilized or favage, I never addreffed myfelf in the 60 language of decency and friendship-without receiv-٢, " ing a decent and friendly anfwer-with man it has often been otherwife. 00

" In wandering over the barren plains of inhofpitable Denmark, through honeft Sweden, and frozen Lapland, rude and churlifh Finland, unprincipled Ruffia, and the wide fpread regions of the wandering Tartar,—if hungry, dry, cold, wet, or fick, the women have ever been friendly to me, and uniformly fo; and to add to this virtue, (fo worthy of the appellation of benevolence,) thefe actions have been performed in fo free and fo kind a manner, that if I was thirfty, I drank the fweeteft draught, and if hungry, I ate the coarfe meal with a double relifh."

And these are they whom Weishaupt would corrupt! One of thefe, whom he had embraced with fondnefs, would he have murdered, to fave his honour, and qualify himfelf to preach virtue! But let us not be too severe on Weishaupt-let us wash ourselves clear of all stain before we think of reprobating him. Are we not guilty in fome degree, when we do not cultivate in the women those powers of mind, and those difpolitions of heart, which would equally dignify them in every station as in those humble ranks in which Mr. Ledyard most frequently faw them? I cannot think that we do this. They are not only to grace the whole of cultivated fociety, but it is in their faithful and affectionate perfonal attachment that we are to find the fweetest pleasures that life can give. Yet in all these fituations where the manner in which they are treated is not dictated by the ftern laws of necessity, are they not trained up for mere amusement-are not serious occupations confidered as a tafk which hurts their lovelinefs? What is this but felfifhnefs, or as if they had no virtues worth cultivating? Their business is supposed to be the ornamenting themselves, as if nature did not dictate this to them already, with at least as much force as is necessary. Every thing is prescribed to them because it makes them more lovely-even their moral leffons are enforced by this argument, and Mifs Woolftoncraft is perfectly right when the fays that the fine leffons given to young women by Fordyce or Rouffeau are nothing but felfish and refined voluptuousness. This advocate of her fex puts her fifters in the proper point of view, when she tells them that they are, like man, the fubjects of God's moral government,-like man, preparing themselves for boundless improvement in a better state of existence. Had she adhered to this view of the matter, and kept it conftantly in fight, her book (which doubtlefs contains many excellent things, highly deferving deferving of their ferious confideration) would have been a most valuable work. She justly observes, that the virtues of the fex are great and respectable, but that in our mad chace of pleafure, only pleafure, they are little thought of or attended to. Man trufts to his own uncontroulable power, or to the general goodnefs of the fex, that their virtues will appear when we have occafion for them ;--- " but we will fend for these some " other time :"-Many noble difplays do they make of the most difficult attainments. Such is the patient bearing up under misfortunes, which has no brilliancy to fupport it in the effort. This is more difficult than braving danger in an active and confpicuous fituation. How often is a woman left with a family, and the shattered remains of a fortune, loft perhaps by diffipation or by indolence-and how feldom, how very feldom, do we fee woman shrink from the task, or discharge it with negligence ? Is it not therefore folly next to madnefs, not to be careful of this our greatest bleffing-of things which fo nearly concern our peace-nor guard ourfeives, and thefe our best companions and friends, from the effects of this fatal Illumination? It has indeed brought to light what dreadful lengths men will go, when under the fanatical and dazzling glare of happinels in a ftate of liberty and equality, and fpurred onby infatiable luxury, and not held in check by moral feelings and the reftraints of religion-and mark, reader, that the women have here alfo taken the complexion of the men, and have even gone beyond them. If we have feen a fon prefent himfelf to the National Affembly of France, profeffing his fatisfaction with the execution of his father three days before, and declaring himself a true citizen, who prefers the nation to all other confiderations; we have also seen, on the fame day, wives denouncing their husbands, and (O shocking to human nature!) mothers denouncing their fons, as bad citizens

tizens and traitors. Mark too what return the women have met with for all their horrid fervices, where, to express their fentiments of civism and abhorrence of royalty, they threw away the character of their fex, and bit the amputated limbs of their murdered countrymen*. Surely these patriotic women merited that the rights of their fex should be confidered in full council, and they were well entitled to a feat; but there is not a fingle act of their government in which the fex is confidered as having any rights whatever, or that they are things to be cared for.

Are not the accurfed fruits of Illumination to be feen in the prefent humiliating condition of woman in France? pampered in every thing that can reduce them to the mere instruments of animal pleasure. In their present ftate of national moderation (as they call it) and fecurity, fee Madame Tallien come into the public theatre, accompanied by other beautiful women, (I was about to have missiamed them Ladies,) laying aside all modefty, and prefenting themfelves to the public view, with bared limbs, à la Sauvage, as the alluring objects of defire. I make no doubt but that this is a ferious matter, encouraged, nay, prompted by government. To keep the minds of the Parifians in the prefent fever of diffolute gaiety, they are at more expence from the national treasury for the support of the fixty theatres, than all the penfions and honorary offices in Britain, three times told, amount to. Was not their abominable farce in the church of Notre Dame a bate of the fame kind in the true fpirit of Weishaupt's Eroterion? « We

Orleans, the first prince of the blood, did not fcruple to profitute his daughter, if not to the embraces, yet to the wanton view of the public, with the precife intention of inflaming their defires. (See the account given of the dinners at Sillery's, by Camille Defmoulines, in his fpeech against the Briffotins.) But what will be the end of all this? The fondlings of the wealthy will be pampered in all the indulgences which fastidious voluptuousness finds neceffary for varying or enhancing its pleasures; but they will either be flighted as toys, or they will be immured; and the companions of the poor will be drudges and flaves.

I am fully perfuaded that it was the enthufiastic admiration of Grecian democracy that recommended to the French nation the drefs à la Grecque, which exhibits not the elegant, ornamented beauty, but the alluring female, fully as well as Madame Tallien's drefs à la Sauvage. It was no doubt with the fame adherence to serious principle, that Mademoiselle Therouanne was most beautifully dressed à l'Amazonne on the 5th of October 1789, when she turned the heads of so many young officers of the regiments at Verfailles. The Cythera, the hominum divunque voluptas, at the cathedral of Notre Dame, was also dreffed à la Grecque: There is a most evident and characteristic change in the whole fystem of female drefs in France. The Filles de l'Opera always gave the ton, and were furely withheld by no rigid principle. They fometimes produced very extravagant and fantastic forms, but these were almoft almost always in the style of the highest ornament, and they trufted, for the reft of the impression which they wifhed to make, to the fascinating expression of elegant movements. This indeed was wonderful, and hardly conceivable by any who have not feen a grand ballet performed by good actors. I have fhed tears of the most fincere and tender forrow during the exhibition of Antigone, set to music by Traëtta, and performed by Madame Meilcour and Sre Torelli, and Zantini. I can eafily conceive the impreffion to be ftill ftronger, though perhaps of another kind, when the former fuperb dreffes are changed for the expressive simplicity of the Grecian. I cannot help thinking that the female ornaments in the reft of Europe, and even among ourfelves, have less elegance fince we lost the fanction of the French court. But fee how all this will terminate, when we shall have brought the fex fo low, and will not even wait for a Mahometan paradife. What can we expect but fuch a diffoluteness of manners, that the endearing ties of relation and family, and mutual confidence within doors, will be flighted, and will ceafe; and every man must stand up for himself, single and alone?

Fæcunda culpæ sæcula nuptias Primum inquinavêre, et genus, et domos. Hoc fonte derivata clades In patriam populumque fluxit. Hor. iii. 6. 17.

This is not the fuggestion of prudish fear, I think it is the natural course of things, and that France is at this moment giving to the world the fullest proof of Weishaupt's fagacity, and the judgment with which he has formed his plans. Can it tend to the improvement of our morals or manners to have our ladies frequent the gymnastic theatres, and see them decide, like the Roman

Roman matrons, on the merits of a naked gladiator or wreftler? Have we not enough of this already with our vaulters and pofture-mafters, and fhould we admire any lady who had a rage for fuch spectacles? Will it improve our taste to have our rooms ornamented with fuch paintings and sculptures as filled the cenaculum, and the study of the refined and elegant moralist Horace, who had the art-ridendo duere verum ? Shall we be improved when fuch indulgences are thought compatible with fuch lessons as he generally gives for the conduct of life? The pure Morality of Illuminatifm is now employed in ftripping Italy of all those precious remains of ancient art and voluptuoufnefs; and Paris will ere long be the deposit and the refort of artifts from all nations, there to fludy the works of ancient masters, and to return from thence panders of public corruption. The plan is masterly, and the lowborn Statefinen and Generals of France may in this refpect be set on a level with a Colbert or a Condé. But the confequences of this Gallic dominion over the minds of fallen man will be as dreadful as their dominion over their lives and fortunes.

Recollect in what manner Spartacus propofed to corrupt his fifters (for we need not fpeak of the manner in which he expected that this would promote his plan —this is abundantly plain). It was by deftroying their moral fentiments, and their fentiments of religion. Recollect what is the recommendation that the Atheift Minos gives of his ftep-daughters, when he fpeaks of them, as proper perfons for the Lodge of Sifters. "They have got over all prejudices, and, in matters "of religion they think as I do." Thefe profligates judged rightly that this affair required much caution, and that the utmoft attention to decency, and even delicacy, muft be obferved in their rituals and ceremonies, otherwife the women would be difgufted. This was forward, never ceafes to enjoin his colleagues to prefs the ftudy of natural hiftory and cofmogony, and carefully to bring forward every fact which was hoftile to the Mofaic accounts. It became a ferious part of the exercifes of their wealthy pupils, and their perplexing difcoveries were moft oftentatioufly difplayed. M. de Luc, a very eminent naturalift, has fhewn, in a letter to the Chevalier Dr. Zimmermann, (publifhed, I think, about the year 1790,) how very fcanty the knowledge of these observers has been, and how precipitate have been their conclusions. For my own part, I think the affair is of little confequence. Moses writes the history, not of this globe, but of the race of Adam.

The fcience of thefe philosophers is not remarkable in other branches, if we except M. d'Alembert's mathematics^{*}. Yet the imposing confidence of Voltaire was such, that he passes for a perfon fully informed, and he pronounces on every subject with fo much authority, with such a force of exprefsion, and generally with so much wit or pleasantry, that his hearers and readers are fascinated, and soon convinced of what they wish to be true.

It is not by the wildom nor by the profound knowledge which these writers display, that they 3 B have * Never was there any thing more contemptible than the phyfical and mechanical positions in Diderot's great work, the Systeme de la Nature, (Barruel affirms, that he was the author, and got 100 pistoles for the copy, from the perfon who related the ftory to him,) that long ago found that Diderot had affisted Robinet to make a book out of his Masonic Oration, which I mentioned in page 41. Robinet trusted to Diderot's knowledge in natural philosophy. But the Junto were assured of the book De la Nature. Diderot seems to have, after this, read Dr. Hartley's book, and has greatly refined on the crude system of Robinet. But after all, the Systeme de la Nature is contemptible, if it be confidered as pretending to what is received as science by a mechanical philosopher. have acquired celebrity, a fame which has been fo pernicious. It is by fine writing, by works addreffed to the imagination and to the affections, by excellent dramas, by affecting moral effays, full of expreffions of the greateft refpect for virtue, the most tender benevolence, and the highest fentiments of honour and dignity.—By these means they fascinate all readers; they gain the effecem of the worthy, who imagine them fincere, and their pernicious doctrines are thus spread abroad, and steal into the minds of the diffolute, the licentious, and the unwary.

But I am writing to Britons, who are confidered by our neighbours on the Continent as a nation of philosophers-to the countrymen of Bacon, of Locke, of Newton-who are not to be wheedled like children, but must be reasoned with as men .---Voltaire, who decides without hefitation on the character of the most distant nations in the most remote antiquity, did not know us : he came among us, in the beginning of his career, with the higheft expectations of our fupport, and hoped to make his fortune by his Pucelle d'Orleans. It was rejected with difdain-but we published his Henriade for him: and, notwithstanding his repeated disappointments of the fame kind, he durft not offend his . countrymen by flandering us, but joined in the profound respect paid by all to British science .- Our writers, whether on natural or moral science, are ftill regarded as ftandard claffics, and are ftudied with care. Lord Verulam is acknowledged by every man of science to have given the first just defcription of true philoiophy, pointed out its objects, and afcertained its mode of procedure-And Newton is equally allowed to have evinced the propriety of the Baconian precepts by his unequalled fuccefs, Juâ fuâ Mathefi facem preferente.—The most celebrated philosophers on the Continent are those who have completed by demonstration the wonderful guesses of his penetrating genius. Bailli, or Condorcet, (I forget which,) struck with the inconceivable reaches of Newton's thoughts, breaks out, in the words of Lucretius, Te fequor, O magna gentis decus, inque tuis nunc Fixa pedum pono preffis vestigia signis. Tu pater et rerum inventor, tu patria nobis Suppeditas precepta, tuisque ex inclute chartis, Floriferis ut apes in saltibus omnia libant, Omnia nos itidem depascimur aurea dicta; Aurea, perpetuâ semper dignissima vitâ.

After fuch avowals of our capacity to inftruct ourfelves, fhall we ftill fly to those diffurbers of the world for our leffons? No—Let us rally round our own ftandards—let us take the path pointed out by Bacon—let us follow the fteps of Newton—and, to conclude, let us ferioufly confider a most excellent advice by the highest authority:

"Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheep's cloathing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves—by THEIR FRUITS YE SHALL KNOW THEM—Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"
